The time has arrived for something more to be said regarding the qualifications necessary for the artists who are to interpret the newly arising drama, which is not so much necessarily intellectual, as is often assumed, but vital and real in relation to life. Mr. Bernard Shaw has pointed out that stage emotion often runs in quite false grooves, giving us tears when there should be laughter and vice-versâ, and other anomalies, and these discrepancies are laid at the door of the individual artist, the choice of whom, however, rests with the managers, and it is towards the—often—faulty stage standards of the latter that some attention may be directed.

Although it is true, as you point out in your leading article of the 18th, "that the modern method of choosing the actor to suit the part results in a realism of impersonation which often approaches perfection," selection on these lines is often misunderstood, and is responsible for much emotional falsification, because it degenerates into the short-sighted and, dramatically, fatal policy of seeking almost wholly for the external physical resemblances, regardless of the fact that the gift of emotion and imagination are the factors that, in the theatre, are of the most real and vital stature and effect in a dramatic scene. And these qualities are often unaccompanied by ideal physical efficiency.

This is the point that requires a fuller realisation, and it is to be hoped that the repertory managements and others dealing with the new drama will seek the happy medium way between outward personation and inward stage capacity, and consider Mr. W. B. Yeats's obiter dictum that the balanced and steady nature in real life (so often represented on the stage) is usually for artistic purposes an inarticulate and silent one. The criterion of physique and physiognomy, in all its outward manifestations, will sometimes have to be less rigidly adhered to if the new drama demands emotional and imaginative vitality and reality of its interpretive artists.—Yours faithfully,

BREMNER WILLS.

THE NATIONAL THEATRE.

Mr. Justice Madden presided on the 13th inst. at a meeting, convened by the Provost of Trinity College, Dublin, and held in the Regent's House at the College, for the purpose of forming a Dublin Committee in support of establishing a Shakespeare Memorial Theatre.

His Lordship said the idea was that the memorial to Shakespeare should take the form of a national endowed theatre under the management of a directorate who would take care that it should be devoted to the production of English dramas of a truly classical nature, in which the works of the great poet should always have a prominent part. For this proposal, he (Judge Madden) ventured to promise at a meeting in London support and sympathy from Ireland, and he reminded that meeting that Ireland had turned out many of the greatest Shakespearean scholars—many of them associated with Trinity College.

Mr. H. S. Perris, organising secretary, who represented the Shakespeare Memorial Committee, London, said that the National Theatre, on a repertory system, as suggested, would cost—for the site £100,000, for the building £150,000, and a quarter of a million for endowment. He asked them to form in Dublin an energetic committee to forward the movement, and he hoped this would be followed by the formation of committees in Belfast and other centres in Ireland.

Dr. R. T. Tyrrell moved a resolution approving of the scheme, pledging the meeting to do its best to raise a substantial local contribution to the fund, and forming a Dublin Committee. Dr. J. P. Mahaffy seconded the resolution.

Rev. T. A. Finlay, S.J., supporting, said that in Ireland the question naturally arose—Why should they take part in a national movement to honour a great national poet? They were told that it was intended to erect a great theatre in London where those who visited that city from the ends of the earth might see plays of Shakespeare worthily represented. If that were all, they in Ireland would not gain much by the movement, and if they subscribed to the movement in proportion to their personal gain from those results, he was afraid their subscriptions would not be on a lavish scale. But they should look at the matter from a broader point of view. Art, as such, appealed to them, and the traditions of the country obliged them to pay homage to it, whether it came from England or from the French or Germans. Dramatic genius had found its noblest realisation in the works of Shakespeare, and to those creations of genius in its highest form they must pay homage. In this country they had to borrow their dramatic literature from England, and they imported their drama as they did their statesmen. That being so, it concerned them intimately that the drama in England should be worthily maintained.

The resolution was passed, and Mr. Justice Madden was appointed Chairman of the Committee.

At a meeting held on the 14th inst. at the Town Hall, Eastbourne, it was decided to give support to the movement for a Shakespeare Memorial National Theatre. The meeting was presided over by the Deputy-Mayor (Alderman Mark Martin), who had the support of Mr. H. S. Perris, M.A. (organising secretary to the London Committee), Councillor C. W. Bolton, J.P., Major S. F. Cooke, Mr. W. Gardnor-Beard, Mr. Arthur Beckett, Councillor J. C. Wright, Mr. O. R. Dawson, and many others. The Deputy-Mayor regretted that the Duke of Devonshire (Mayor) could not be present, as he would have given an impetus to local energy.

Mr. Perris's address contained a concise summary of the origin and objects of the movement, which began some years ago; in 1916 the 300th anniversary of Shakespeare's death would be reached. An influential committee was formed, with the Lord Mayor of London as chairman, to collect funds for the erection of a monument of Shakespeare. This eventually met with a chorus of condemnation, and it was ultimately resolved that a great national theatre, where Shakespeare's works would always be available to the public in the most artistic form, should be erected. It was hoped to open this theatre on April 23, 1916. It would not be confined simply to the plays of Shakespeare, but be used for works of classical and modern importance. One object was to indicate the worth and importance of the drama in the national life of the country—the drama had not recovered from the slur and prejudice of past generations. The committee would like to see every college and school assist the movement, and especially looked to Eastbourne for support in this respect. An actor, continued Mr. Perris, was now a casual labourer—the most unhappy of beings—who had a good part occasionally, and then fell out of work. They hoped this theatre would provide a career for actors which they had never experienced before. A pension fund would be created in connection with it. Mr. Perris pointed out that the chief duty of the local committees was to make the objects of the project familiar to the people in the various localities.

The following resolution was proposed in a long speech by Councillor Bolton:—

"That this meeting cordially approves of the project for the establishment of a Shakespeare Memorial National Theatre by national subscription; constitutes itself a Local Committee for Eastbourne and District, with power to add to its number, and pledges itself to use its best endeavours to raise a substantial local contribution to the Fund."

Councillor Bolton observed, in his eulogy of Shakespeare, that he was an Englishman to be honoured above all—a man with the greatest intellect ever known to humanity. His works were greatly appreciated in India. The speaker once witnessed a performance of Macbeth by the students of the Calcutta University. The costumes were, of course, not suitable, and he remembered that Lady Macbeth was impersonated by a robust young man robed in a dressing-gown with cord and tassel round his waist.

Major Cooke, in seconding, said people in England failed to appreciate Shakespeare as much as was done in other countries. In America he was worshipped, in Germany he was reverenced. They in Eastbourne considered they had great culture, and therefore there ought to be a ready response to the proposal.—The resolution was unanimously carried. Mr. W. Gardnor-Beard moved:—"That Mr. Frederick Hollins, M.A., be requested to act as Chairman of the Local Committee, Miss H. Pitcairn Bookless and Mr. Arthur Beard as Honorary Secretaries, and Mr. H. Holyoake as Honorary Treasurer, and that an Executive Committee of twenty be appointed, to include the following: Miss C. A. Adams, Mr. Arthur Beard, Mr. Arthur Beckett, Mr. C. W. Bolton, C.S.I., J.P., Mrs. F. H. Browne, Mrs. Cardwell, Miss Chudleigh, Miss Edgar-Clark, Miss Farnell, Mr. W. Gardnor-Beard, Mr. H. Holyoake, Miss Johns, Dr. and Mrs. Merry, Miss H. Pitcairn Bookless, Miss Tait-Reid, and Mr. R. T. Thornton, with power to add to their number.

In seconding, Mrs. F. H. Browne remarked that the fact that England, the leading nation, did not possess a national theatre was a crying disgrace.

The meeting agreed to the motion.

Councillor Wright stated that though he had not attended a theatre more than once in seven or ten years, he supported the movement because he was a lover of literature, and could not ignore the claims of the drama. He did not find an educative force in the drama, because they had to subordinate things to the lower taste of the people. That is why they wanted a national theatre.

In reply to Mr. Beckett, Mr. Perris said it was the intention to throw open the designs for the theatre to competition as soon as [illegible] months. cured.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

SIR CHARLES WYNDHAM, who is playing Sir Richard Kato, K.C., in The Case of Rebellious Susan at the Criterion nightly, with all his original vivacity and emphasis, celebrated his golden wedding on Tuesday. Hundreds of congratulatory messages were received. Few who see Sir Charles's bright and spirited performance in H. A. Jones's piece realise that the marvellously active and energetic actor is seventy years old.

MR. GEORGE ALEXANDER, in connection with Garrick's Villa, says:—"It is not beyond the bounds of possibility that the London and City Council would be disposed to make a grant, although it would be unlikely. There is a precedent, for the Council gave something like £39,000 for the preservation of a view at Richmond. The Middlesex County Council is disposed to consider the contribution of a fourth part." The demolition of such an interesting relic of the past would be a public loss.

THE following actresses took part in the great Suffragist Procession on Saturday last:—Miss Gertrude Elliott, Miss Eva Moore, Miss Decima Moore, Miss Fanny Brough, Miss Janette Steer, Mme. Liza Lehmann, Miss Esther Palliser, Miss Palgrave Turner, Miss Winifred Mayo, Miss Adeline Bourne, Miss Beatrice Forbes Robertson, Miss Inez Bensusan, Miss Jane Comfort, Miss Lena Ashwell, Mrs. Madeline Lucette Ryley, Mrs. Pertwee, Miss Maud Hoffman, Miss Agnes Thomas, Miss Gertrude Kingston, Miss Brinetta Brown, Miss Campbell Patterson, Miss Joan Hayes, Miss Annette Caldicott, Miss Constance Moxon, Miss Sydney Keith, Miss Vera Leslie, Miss Phillis Relph, and many others. The members of the Actresses' Franchise League looked very picturesque, Miss Eva Moore and Miss Decima Moore carrying directoire staves with beautiful La France roses bound to them, pink and green being the colours of the League, while other members carried bunches of pink flowers and green leaves. Most of them were in white, with the A.F.L. badge on, and some wore broad pink and green sashes.

THE programme of the Theatrical Garden Party next Tuesday looks likely to beat everything that has been done in this connection in previous years. In the tent reserved for hairdressing attempts on the part of actors on the heads of actresses singular results will doubtless emanate from the efforts of Mr. James Welch, Mr. Alfred Lester, Mr. Lyn Harding, and Mr. Maurice Farkoa. To the long list of attractive names in connection with the Shooting Gallery, the Waxworks, the Tea Châlet on the Lake, the Palais de Luxe, and the ice cream business are to be added those of Miss Pauline Chase, Miss Jessie Bateman, Miss Lena Ashwell, Miss Eva Moore, Miss Compton, the untiring Mrs. Gay, Mr. Thomas Beecham, Mr. Paul Rubens, Miss Winifred Emery, Miss Evelyn Millard, and Miss Gabrielle Ray.

THE troupe at Lord George Grossmith, jun.'s Royal Circus will include Mr. Edmund Payne, Mr. George Ali, Mr. Robert Hale, Mr. "Billy" Stevens, Mr. Lawrence Grossmith, Mr. W. H. Berry, Mr. Fred Emney, Mr. Jack McArdle, Miss Constance Hyem, Mr. Albert Felino, and Mr. George Grossmith, jun. (ringmaster).

MR. CYRIL MAUDE'S new and entrancing melodrama of real life in four acts, entitled The Pick of Oakham; or, The Girl with the Bad Habit, written by Messrs. Leo Trevor and John Harwood, is sure to draw. To see Mr. Lennox Pawle as a featherweight jockey, with Miss Hilda Trevelyan playing the part of the heroine, and Miss Maidie Hope as the hapless victim of the hawk-eyed villain (Mr. Cyril Maude) should be irresistible; and Mr. Harry Nicholls and Mr. Kenneth Douglas in the other parts, with the help of Mr. Brandon Thomas turned showman for the day, and Mr. Alfred Turner as business manager will secure success.

LADY TREE and Miss Ellen Terry will take part in the masque in aid of the National Theatre on Thursday and following days.

MR. CHARLES FROHMAN will reopen the Duke of York's Theatre in September with A Bolt from the Blue, adapted from the French of Le Costaud des Espinettes, in which Miss Irene Vanbrugh will appear. This will be followed by Mr. Somerset Maugham's new comedy, in which Miss Vanbrugh will also appear.

IN addition, Mr. Frohman has actually in his possession plays entitled The Foolish Virgin, The Sacred Forest, The Scandal, The Unknown Dancer, A Woman's Way, The Eldest Son, and Love Amongst the Lions, and Henri Lavedan's Sire, besides contracts for pieces by other English and French authors. So there will be no dearth of material for the autumn season of the Duke of York's.

LADY BEERBOHM TREE, vice-chairman of the Women's Aerial League, responded to the toast of the evening at the first annual dinner held at the Savoy Hotel on Tuesday last. Women did not propose, she said, to fly, and one woman who had entered into the kingdom had been glad to abdicate. But it was for them to do all that lay in woman's power to help on the cause of aviation, so that the men of the British Empire should at least not be second to those of any other nation on earth. Among the invited guests were Miss Ellen Terry, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Bourchier, and Miss Lena Ashwell. Following the dinner a new playlet, entitled The Emergency Exit, written for the occasion by J. C. Ledward and Gladys Mendl, was presented. Mr. L. E. Mendl, Miss Margaret Ledward, Mr. T. W. Heale, Miss Noel Mackern, Mr. Cuthbert Maunder, and Mr. J. L. Ledward were in the cast.

MR. FORBES ROBERTSON will appear in the Duke of Buckingham's Farewell Scene from Henry VIII. at a special matinée to be given at The Playhouse on Monday, in aid of the Charterhouse Southwark Mission. This will be Mr. Forbes Robertson's only appearance in London before his return to America. Other items will be The Toymaker of Nuremberg, with Mr. Cyril Maude in his original part of The Toymaker and Miss Margery Maude as The Girl. General Sir Robert Baden-Powell, Mr. Charles Allan, and Mr. Hewitt, all old Carthusians, will also contribute to the programme.

IN the House of Commons on Tuesday Mr. Bottomley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in preparing his Budget for the current financial year, he would consider the desirability of seeking new sources of revenue by imposing an ad valorem stamp duty upon—amongst other things which he enumerated—theatre, music-hall, and other entertainment receipts. Mr. Lloyd George said he should be glad to consider Mr. Bottomley's suggestions in connection with the various other proposals which had been brought to his notice for the raising of revenue. This is the fifth year in which Mr. Bottomley has made the proposal without the least result.

MR. LEWIS WALLER, for his revival at the Lyric of Miss Elizabeth's Prisoner, has secured a strong cast, including Mr. Frank Woolfe, Mr. Cronin Wilson, Mr. Herbert Jarman, Mr. Caton Woodville, Mr. G. Welsh, Mr. C. Keene, Miss Gordon Lee, Miss Titheradge, and Miss Lottie Venne, well-known singer" in her original part of Mistress selected for the te published in the Pea

THE annual general meeting in connection with Actors' Day will be held on Monday next, June 27, at twelve mid-day, at the Duke of York's Theatre, by kind permission. The agenda will include the reception of report from the Advisory Board, and the election to vacant seats on that body. Nominations for the Advisory Board, proposed and seconded by contributors, must reach the Hon. Sec., Dudley House, 37, Southampton-street, Strand, W.C., not later than twelve o'clock to-day.

MR. HERBERT TRENCH will present at the Haymarket Theatre on Tuesday a comedy in four acts by Elizabeth Arnim, entitled Priscilla Runs Away. The cast will include Miss Neilson-Terry, Miss Helen Haye, Miss Amy Lamborn, Miss Sydney Fairbrother, Miss Agnes Thomas, Miss Frances Ivor, Miss Victoria Addison, Mr. E. Lyall Swete, Mr. Edward Rigby, Mr. E. A. Warburton, Mr. Charles Maude, Mr. Charles V. France, Mr. Louis Goodrich, Mr. Norman Page, Mr. J. Fisher White, and Mr. H. Hignett. The play will be produced for Mr. Herbert Trench by Mr. Norman McKinnel. The incidental music has been specially composed by Mr. Norman O'Neill. The scenery, costumes, and appointments have been designed and arranged by Mr. F. Cayley Robinson, and the scenery has been painted by Mr. Joseph Harker.

ON Monday there will be presented at the New Theatre, Cardiff, a musical comedy called The Pigeon House, by the Earl of Yarmouth, who, under the nom-de-plume of Eric Hope, has composed both the words and music. The libretto was produced at Worthing in 1901 as a comedy. The Earl of Yarmouth, who is the eldest son of the Marquess of Hertford, has been in the city for some time conducting the rehearsals at the Grand Hotel, Cardiff, the company being made up of several well-known professional artists and a number of members of the Cardiff Operatic Society. Amongst those who will appear in leading parts are his lordship, who takes the juvenile rôle; Miss Thelma Raye, Mr. O. E. Lennon, Mr. A. Wellton Fordham, and Mr. Alan Davenport. The stage-management is entrusted to Mr. Edwin Bryan.

THE new premises of the Touring Managers' Club, at 5, Wardour-street, will be opened to-day. There will be a special dinner at the club premises at 5.30, at which upwards of fifty members have signified their intention of being present. Morning dress will be worn. The club is a long-felt want, as not only can members get their meals there, but there is also a splendid set of rooms, which were lacking at the old premises, including billiard-room, dining-room, and card-room, in addition to a capital roof garden, where afternoon teas will be served during the summer months. It is hoped that all managers will join and support this excellent movement, as of course the expenses have necessarily been increased considerably.

MR. LAWRENCE IRVING and Miss Mabel Hackney have completed arrangements for their English provincial tour prior to their return to America in November. Two new plays will be presented, one written by Mr. Irving himself, entitled The Unwritten Law, and the other by Mr. Walter Frith, called Margaret Catchpole. This tour will be the first important venture of Mr. and Mrs. Irving since joining the ranks of actor-managers. Entirely new scenery, costumes, &c., have been made, and Mr. Irving has secured a strong company, many of whom served under the banner of his late distinguished father. Mr. Irving is travelling his own staff, including electricians, scene- and fly-men, and also a musical director to take charge of the various theatre orchestras.

MR. W. CLARKSON has received the following letter in connection with his costumes for the Royal Military Tournament: "Dear Mr. Clarkson,—I am much obliged for all your work in Britannia's Muster. The dresses, make-ups, and cars could not have been better, and, last, but by no means least, the lady you engaged to play Britannia (Miss Lawrence) was charming, and played her part most gracefully and well. The great success of the whole pageant is due in no small measure to you.—Yours faithfully, GEORGE NUGENT (Colonel), Hon. Sec., R.N. and M.T." Mr. Clarkson has also received a wire from the Prince of Wales, thanking him for congratulations.

AN amazing coincidence is reported in connection with the production of At the World's Mercy, the successful musical comedy of Mr. Carr Loates, which is being performed at the Star Theatre, Swansea, this week. One of the principal incidents in the play is the sudden discovery by Captain Manley of his long-lost daughter through a mark on her arm. In the front of the house there sat—so the story goes—a shipmaster who had sailed the seas for many a year, and next to him a child of comparatively tender years. During the action of the play the latter was observed to be sobbing bitterly. The captain turned to inquire the cause of her sudden outburst of grief, with dramatic results. During the conversation which ensued he discovered that he, too, had found his daughter, whom he had not seen since she was scarcely able to toddle, and of whose whereabouts he was until then entirely ignorant.

MR. WENTWORTH CROKE has, we see, joined the opposition camp by becoming a director of the British Bio-Electrics, Ltd., a new and very powerful company just floated to acquire the existing Ladbroke Hall, now being successfully run as an electric theatre, to say nothing of cinematograph Theatres at Kennington, Slough, Wandsworth, Barnes, and Birmingham. This company has also acquired options on fourteen other exceptionally well-situated sites and buildings.

BY the courtesy of General Productions, Ltd., Mr. Archie Selwyn has been enabled to accept an offer to play in and stage-manage The Broken Melody at Kelly's Theatre, Liverpool, next week. This is Mr. Selwyn's ninth re-engagement by M. Auguste Van Biene, extending over a period of seven years.

MR. HENRY LUDLOW, who is appearing this week at the Pleasure Gardens Theatre, Folkestone, in Mr. Wm. Mollison's part of Dick Crawford in The Chorus Lady, has lately written a new last act to his comedy, Lady Bathurst at Home, which he will produce.

AS a rule it is the curate whom one associates with the presentation of a pair of slippers, but this time it is an actor. Whilst playing in Manchester last week, Mr. William Lockhart was presented by a lady with a handsome pair of slippers with a large lyre beautifully embroidered on each. The appropriateness of the design will be seen when it is stated that Mr. William Lockhart was playing Amos Bloodgood in Are You a Mason?

MISS ILLINGTON, the American actress, recently left the stage "for ever" after divorcing her husband and marrying again. She said at the time: "I shall never appear on the boards again under any conditions. One hears so much about the lure of it and the fascination of the applause. To me personally it is unsatisfactory and distasteful now that I have discovered that the real joys of life are not found in the theatre. I want to sit at home in the evenings, to be quiet, to sew, to read, and go to bed when the chickens do, and have a feeling of absolute rest." Miss Illington is now elated at the prospect of returning to the stage next autumn.

AFTER five years' service as resident-manager at the Chester Royalty Theatre, Mr. C. B. Fountaine is leaving the old Deeside city to accept a similar appointment at the Opera House, Northampton. He will commence his new duties on July 18. Mr. Fountaine will still remain the valued servant of Messrs. Milton Bode and Edward Compton.

DURING Mr. Fountaine's régime the Chester Royalty has undergone considerable structural extensions and improvements, but the most important event during the five years of Mr. Fountaine's managership was the granting to the theatre of a music and dancing licence, which, combined with the dramatic licence, enables the management to give its patrons every variety of programme—a condition of things absolutely necessary to ensure financial success in a small city of less than 40,000 inhabitants.

PRIOR to coming to the ancient city, Mr. Fountaine was manager, for his present proprietors, of the Theatre Royal, Leamington, and for six years manager at the Theatre Royal, Coatbridge, in Scotland. Previously, for eight years he was on the stage, and had a promising career. He travelled with the famous Majilton family in Round the Clock, and was general-manager for Mrs. Bandmann-Palmer.

MR. F. O. SENECHAL, a Paris agent, has conceived the happy idea of a syndicate, which has been formed, with Mr. J. B. Vedrenne and Mr. A. G. Mackenzie as directors, to secure the "first call" on all plays written by the leading French authors of the day for a period of years, in most cases over seven, and to produce translations and adaptations of these plays, or to otherwise arrange for their production in England and the British Dominions.

AMONG those who have already contracted with the syndicate are M. Brieux, M. Pierre Berton, M. Tristan Bernard, M. A. Bisson, M. Alfred Capus, M. Romain Coolus, M. F. de Croisset, M. G. Devore, M. E. Fabre, MM. R. de Flers and de Caillavet, M. Georges Feydeau, M. Paul Gavault, M. Hennequin, M. H. Kistemackers, M. Henri Lavedan, and M. Octave Mirbeau. Mr. A. G. Mackenzie, who is a director of the Gaiety Theatre Company, will arrange with Mr. Vedrenne to secure a leading London theatre for the enterprise next season.

THE attraction this week at Mr. Wentworth Croke's Lyric Opera House, Hammersmith, is Dion Boucicault's well-known Irish drama Arrah-na-Pogue. Next week Mr. Wentworth Croke announces a return visit of the play bearing the alluring title Her Fatal Past.

GREAT enthusiasm marked the production of Mr. Basil Dean's one-act play, Mother to Be, at Oxford last week. In responding to the insistent demand for a speech on Saturday night, Mr. Dean referred to his good fortune in having the play performed by members of Miss Horniman's company. His new one-act play will be produced at the company's Manchester theatre in the autumn, though Mr. Dean himself leaves the company, after three years of work under this repertory management.

MISS LAURA HANSEN concludes to-night a highly successful tour as Lady Isabel with Mr. Tom Watt. At every town visited Miss Hansen has received flattering notices from the Press and compliments from the various managers on her rendering of the part. Miss Hansen feels the need of a rest for a few weeks, but hopes to resume work again in the autumn.

"LOVE O' LIFE," a play in four acts by Lucy France Pierce, was produced for copyright purposes at the Court Theatre on June 17.

PROFESSOR GILBERT MURRAY'S version of Iphigenie in Tauris will be one of the pieces to be presented next spring at the Duke of York's in Mr. Charles Frohman's repertory season.

MR. FRANK LINDO, we are sorry to learn, is seriously ill in Birmingham, and he has been unable to figure in his customary rôle in Home, Sweet Home. It is hoped, however, that he will have sufficiently recovered to appear at the Elephant and Castle in Love the Conqueror on July 4. Mr. Lindo's part of Stephen Armitage in Home, Sweet Home has been admirably undertaken by Mr. Norton Shields.

WE are sorry to hear that Captain Robert Marshall, the well-known dramatist, is seriously ill.

MR. JAMES HUSSEY has been engaged by Mr. Eugene C. Stafford for the title-rôle, the Rev. Robert Spalding, in the autumn tour of The Private Secretary.

MR. CHARLES FROHMAN, on his recent visit to Paris, secured a comedy entitled Le Mariage de Mlle. Beulemans, by MM. Fonson and Wicheler, two Belgian playwrights, which has already run for a hundred nights in Brussels, and has since been seen at the Renaissance, Paris, where it has been very successful, in spite of its fresh and clean spirit.

MR. STUART LOMATH, who has just concluded a successful tour with his play Whom God Hath Joined, is busily engaged in putting the finishing touches to a new drama entitled The Female Strangler. This play has a thrilling plot, and introduces the "detective element" which is so popular at the present moment. Mr. Lomath intends making the production very shortly on an elaborate scale.

MISS GRACE DENBEIGH-RUSSELL, who is this week playing Lady Hampshire in The Night of the Party for General Productions, Ltd., has been kindly released by them to play Mrs. Spinaker in The Broken Melody for Mr. Van Biene at Kelly's Theatre, Liverpool, next week. She will rejoin Are You a Mason? as Eva Perry on July 4 at Douglas.

MISS MARIE DAINTON, Miss Nina Sevening, and Mr. Fred Kerr were amongst the saloon passengers of the Cunard liner Campania, which arrived at Liverpool from New York on Wednesday. Miss Dainton returns from a successful sixteen months' tour in America. She has appeared chiefly in vaudeville and besides having performed at the principal theatres in New York, has travelled as far south as New Orleans, after completing a wide circuit in the east.

"CHARLEY'S AUNT," which is now having a twelve months' rest in the small towns, will commence its sixth tour under the direction of Messrs. W. Payne Seddon and George Robertson in the autumn of 1911 by arrangement with Mr. Brandon Thomas. The "Old Lady" last autumn broke six records, the receipts in the case of many one-night stands exceeding those of any three-night visits. Her next tour will be a "flying one," covering the whole of the coast towns of England during July, August, and September.

MR. WALTER BENTLEY, who was engaged by Mr. William Anderson, of the King's Theatre, Melbourne, to produce and play in Hamlet and Macbeth, was forced by loss of voice to abandon the engagement, and has been under medical treatment ever since in Sydney. He intends to leave shortly for New Zealand, where he will take a course of baths at Roterna, and then he hopes to be able to resume teaching in one of the large Australian towns.

MR. WENTWORTH CROKE, taking advantage of the Royal Agricultural Show being held in Liverpool this year, re-opened the Shakespeare Theatre for the week with the evergreen Florodora, played by an exceptionally strong company, amongst whom may be mentioned Johnnie Schofield as Tweedlepunch, Florence Hersee as Angela, Daisy Luke as Dolores, and Kate Leicester as Lady Holyrood.

FATHER BERNARD VAUGHAN will officiate at the wedding at St. James's Church, Spanish-place, W., on Wednesday next, of Mr. Basil S. Foster, the Worcestershire and M.C.C. cricketer, and Daly's Theatre actor, and Miss Gwendoline Brogden, who was recently playing Cinderella in Pinkie and the Fairies at His Majesty's Theatre. Mr. G. N. Foster will be "best man."

MR. BASIL FOSTER, who is the fourth of seven famous "games" brothers, was formerly a Corinthian and Old Malvernian footballer of note, and he is one of the finest racquet players in the country. He reached the semi-final of this year's Amateur Racquets Championship, and was then the victim of an unfortunate accident, being badly hit in the face by his opponent's racquet. He is one of the best-looking men on the London stage, and is at present playing John, Earl of Quorn, in The Dollar Princess.

THE Opera House, Southport, closes this evening for the summer vacation, which extends from June 27 to July 16 inclusive.

MR. JOSEPH WATERFIELD has secured a long lease of the Strand Theatre, which will be under the management of Mr. Stanley Cooke. The opening date has been definitely fixed for Sept. 10.

MISS MARIE TEMPEST has arranged with Mr. Charles Frohman for a season in America, commencing in October next, and probably extending till the following summer.

MISS MARIE DAINTON AND MISS NINA SEVENING arrived in Liverpool on Wednesday from New York in the Campania.

MR. SEYMOUR HICKS, owing to a severe attack of laryngitis, which has resulted in his temporarily losing the use of his voice, has been obliged to cancel the rest of his tour, and will not act again until late in the autumn.

MR. AND MRS. W. V. GARROD (Miss Bertha Kingston) are enjoying a short Continental holiday, visiting Paris and Switzerland, and returning in time for The Prodigal Parson tour, which starts at Sheffield on 1st prox. Mr. Charles Halling will have charge of Mr. Garrod's A Country Girl in London company.

AT Kelly's Theatre, Liverpool, on Friday next, at the conclusion of The Broken Melody, Mr. George H. Child is supporting Mr. Auguste Van Biene in an entirely new one-act episode dealing with Australian bush life. This is the third part this year that Mr. Child has had the honour of creating with the eminent 'celloist.

AN attractive entertainment has been prepared for the matinée at the Shaftesbury Theatre on Thursday, June 30, in aid of the National Service League. Mr. Courtneidge has kindly lent the theatre, the orchestra has promised its services, and among those who have consented to appear are Mme. Ada Crossley, Miss Florence Smithson, and Miss Cecily Courtneidge, Sir Charles Wyndham and Miss Mary Moore, Sir John Hare and Mr. A. E. George in A Quiet Rubber, Mr. Albert Chevalier, and Mr. H. B. Irving. A short play, The Flame, by Miss Marianne Stayton, will also be produced.

IN a recent notice of the Pavilion Theatre, Mile End, we stated that the Pavilion stock company was giving its farewell performance. The stock has been most successful, and will not be withdrawn for the present.

WE record with regret the death of Mr. James East Philip, the composer of "The Jewel of Asia," one of the most popular numbers of The Geisha, who passed away at Deal on Tuesday. Mr. Philip, who died from syncope at the early age of forty-two, had a very successful career as a student at the Royal Academy of Music, winning four medals and especially distinguishing himself at the organ. He was also an able pianist. He was formerly the conductor of some of Mr. George Edwardes's musical comedy productions at the Gaiety Theatre.

AT His Majesty's Theatre, Barrow-in-Furness, Mr. and Mrs. Calvert Routledge are having a most successful summer season with a series of high-class entertainments, à la The Follies, a form of amusement which they so auspiciously inaugurated there last year. The Will o' the Wisps are just concluding a six weeks' stay, during which they have played to excellent business, and they will be followed by several similar companies of equal reputation. For the autumn dramatic season Mr. Routledge has secured come of the strongest attractions touring, and this smart theatre is now one of the most prosperous in the North of England.

MISS MARIE HARCOURT has just concluded a special five weeks with Mr. Wentworth Croke's Girl of My Heart company. Mr. Hugh Montgomery is repeating many of his old successes at Mr. Wither's Merthyr stock, notably those of Tom Robinson and James Pengarth the Bellringer.

MR. CHARLES HERRICK has just concluded two and a half years' engagement with Mr. Wentworth Croke.

MISS CHRISTINE RAYNER, who has made a hit as Juliet in Mr. E. S. Petley and Miss Una Gilbert's successful tour of Little Mrs. Cummin, had a narrow escape at the Kursaal, Bexhill, on Monday night. At the conclusion of the performance, when Miss Gilbert, Miss Rayner, and Mr. E. J. Stevenson were taking the fourth curtain, Miss Rayner's dress, a charming confection of white satin and chiffon, caught fire from one of the candles used in the piece. At some personal risk Miss Gilbert and Mr. Stevenson rushed forward and extinguished the flames, thus saving the young artist from what might have been a serious accident.

THE marriage of Miss Effie Cook, a member of the Follies, daughter of Mrs. Cook, of the Greys, St. Michael's Road, Aldershot, took place last week in the presence of many friends at the Old Parish Church, Aldershot, the bridegroom being Mr. Walter Harte Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Johnson, of Stella's Cottage, Waverley, Farnham, Surrey. Mr. Laval, of the Follies, officiated at the organ, and rendered a series of acceptable voluntaries, and at the conclusion of the ceremony rendered Mendelssohn's "Wedding March." Amongst the givers of presents were Mr. Fitzroy Gardner (two silver vases), Mr. H. G. Pelissier (grand piano), Miss Ethel Allandale and Mr. Lewis Sydney (furniture), Miss Gwennie Mars and Mr. Harold Burkinshaw (tea and five o'clock tea services), Mr. Dan Everard (silver cake basket), Mr. and Mrs. Tozer (china fruit dish on silver stand), and Miss Phyllis Dare (Sheraton settee).

MR. HENRY TWEEDIE, manager, Daneswood, Cole Park, Middlesex, completes this June his twentieth year as representative of many of the leading theatrical proprietors of the day. The Romany Rye, The Mystery of a Hansom Cab, In Sight of St. Paul's succeeded a large travelling pantomime by C. F. Williams, Plymouth. These engagements evoked the following few lines of commendation:—"Dear Mr. Tweedie,—It gives me much pleasure to testify to the attention and business ability which you brought to bear whilst representing me on the tours of which you were in charge. Everything was of the most satisfactory nature, and I can only say that my appreciation of your services is such that I shall always be happy to offer you a re-engagement under similar circumstances; and it will afford me pleasure at any time to speak a word for you to any brother manager. —With kind regards, believe me, yours faithfully, C. F. Williams." During Mr. Forbes Robertson's absence in America Mr. Henry Tweedie had complete financial control of two tours, and upon Mr. Robertson's recommendation Miss Olga Nethersole engaged him for two tours of Sapho, upon the conclusion of which she presented Mr. Tweedie with a massive silver cigar-box duly inscribed. Mr. Tweedie makes a great speciality of newspaper work, and works hard throughout the tour to leave no stone unturned to make a financial success of the play he tours. At present he is disengaged, but we are sure when this fact becomes known, Mr. Tweedie will soon find congenial work.

MR. WALTER MAXWELL, who has taken over the entire management of the Hastings Pier, has been fortunate enough to secure Mr. Leonard Boyne in Raffles for his opening attraction. Mr. Maxwell, in addition to attending to the Hastings Pier entertainments and managing for Miss Evelyn Millard at her forthcoming season at the New Theatre, is sending out a company of Mr. Preedy and the Countess, and has engaged Mr. A. W. Baskcomb to play the part created by Mr. Weedon Grossmith. The tour opens at Margate on July 11.

THE annual elocution competition of the British Empire Shakespeare Society will take place at the Queen's Theatre on Monday at 2.30 p.m. The judge will be Mr. H. B. Irving. Members and associates free on presentation of their 1910-11 membership cards, and each member may bring one friend without extra charge.

THE company to play in J. W. Lindsay-Ellis's autumn and spring tour of Lights Out includes Robert Noble and Paulane Emerie, supported by Frank Cariello, Reginald Weston, Herbert Lugg, Arthur T. Barugh, Alexander Munro, Geo. L. Barnes, Claude Clarke, Ernest Ralston, Jessie Jay, and Francis J. Bithell.

THE Actresses' Franchise League gave a matinée at the Kingsway Theatre on Tuesday. A recitation by Miss Maxine Elliott was much enjoyed, and Miss Cicely Hamilton and Christopher St. John's How the Vote Was Won, which was produced last year at the Royalty, was performed, Miss Adeline Bourne acquitting herself well as Winifred. In Mr. Bernard Shaw's Press Cuttings Mr. Leslie Faber was seen to advantage; Miss Di Forbes enacted a militant Suffragette amusingly; and Mr. Edward Rigby played the Orderly well.

MISS ETHEL SMYTH, the composer of The Wreckers, has had the degree of Doctor of Music conferred upon her by the University of Durham. Miss Smyth was present at the Convocation arrayed in the "Mus.Doc." robes of white brocade with a mauve hood. Miss Smyth was born in London, and is the daughter of General J. H. Smyth, late of the Royal Artillery. She studied for a time at the Leipzig Conservatoire. The Wreckers was first given at Leipzig on Nov. 11, 1906.

MR. GEORGE ALEXANDER has kindly lent the St. James's Theatre for a matinée on Friday next for the benefit of the National League for Physical and Educational Improvement. The programme will include a display of physical drill by the students of Mme. Bergman; recitations by Miss Ellen Terry, Miss Lilian Braithwaite, Miss Ola Humphreys, and Mr. Lewis Waller; and the first performance of a one-act play, Scaramouche, by Mr. Dion Clayton Calthrop, in which Miss Ethel Irving, Mr. Norman Forbes, and Mr. Richard Hatteras are to appear. Mr. J. M. Barrie's amusing skit, A Slice of Life, will be enacted by Mr. Gerald du Maurier, Miss Irene Vanbrugh, and Miss Cecilia Loftus; Mr. H. B. Irving and Miss Esmé Beringer will appear in the Closet scene from Hamlet; and Miss Winifred Emery will be seen in her original part of Peg Woffington in Mr. J. B. Fagan's comedietta The Dressing Room. A scene from The Clandestine Marriage will also be given by Mr. Cyril Maude, Mr. Fred Lewis, Mr. John Harwood, Mr. Lionel Rignold, and Miss Maidee Hope. Mr. George Alexander and the Lord Bishop of Ripon will speak.

MR. JOSEPH BEECHAM, the father of the conductor, Mr. Thomas Beecham, has, through his general-manager, Mr. Thomas Quinlan, made arrangements for an opera season at Drury Lane next year of ten or twelve weeks, beginning in April. On the list of stars are Mme. Melba, Mlle. Geraldine Farrar, Miss Olive Fremstadt, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Mme. Louise Homer, Signorina Mignon Nevada, Miss Alma Gluck, Miss Mary Garden, Pasquale Amato, Signor Scotti, Renaud, Mr. Allen Hinckley, and MM. Gilibert and Dufranne. The list of operas includes Aïda, Don Carlos, Falstaff, Rigoletto, Carmen, Moussorgski's Boris Godunof, Barbière di Siviglia, Madama Butterfly, La Vie de Bohème, and La Tosca, Manon, Le Jongleur de Notre Dame, and Thaïs, Tristan und Isolde, Tannhäuser, and Lohengrin, Cavalleria Rusticana, Henry VIII and Samson et Dalila, Pelléas et Mélisande, Roméo et Juliette, Pagliacci, Louise, Mefistofele and Salome. Private subscribers have already guaranteed £40,000.

MR. E. W. CONWAY writes from St. Giles's Workhouse:—"In connection with the death of Mr. Henry Neville, I think I can claim to be a link with the past. I have been 'on the stage' with Charles Kean, Fred Robson, and Charles Mathews. I was call-boy at the Olympic during the management of Alfred Wigan, Robson and Emden, Horace Wigan, and Benjamin Webster. I was call-boy for one night at Windsor Castle when Fred Robson and company played Daddy Hardacre before Queen Victoria, the Prince Consort, and King Edward, then Prince of Wales. I gave Mr. Neville the first call on that eventful night, and I believe I am now the only survivor of those who took part in the original production of The Ticket-of-Leave Man."

MESSRS. SOTHEBY on Monday disposed of a collection of autograph letters, &c., of celebrities. Included in the sale were letters of Buckstone, W. H. Kendal, Arthur Roberts, Julia Neilson, and many others. Portraits were included with the letters of Phelps, Sheridan, Tom Taylor, Sims Reeves, Charles Reade, Mme. Vestris, and Macready, with a playbill of the first appearance of the latter at Bath as Romeo, in December, 1814. All the above were sold for nominal sums. For letters of John P. Kemble, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean, and Mrs. Stirling—the last with portrait—17s. was paid. An angry letter from Edmund Kean to R. W. Elliston, with a playbill and four cheques, fetched £5. A lot consisting of a letter from David Garrick to Mr. Hartson, an epitaph to Garrick's memory, a card of admission to view his villa at Hampton, another for 5, Adelphi-terrace, with an embossed portrait, a receipt signed by Congreve and two cheques and two admissions for Drury Lane and the New Olympic Theatre brought £3 3s.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

The Late Hermann Vezin.

MR. C. O. LANDER writes: "Will you permit me to pay a passing tribute to the dear old actor Hermann Vezin? That he suffered from the stigma of being thought a 'Jonah' was an open secret and one of which he was well aware. Some five years ago it was my great pleasure to be able to avail myself of his services in an all too small part, but one which he filled to perfection—a part on which the climax of the first act entirely depended. He almost, by his performance of that part, lasting seven minutes, turned what seemed a foredoomed failure into a success. I shall never forget the sensation of that night, the calls we had for that first act, the congratulations I received as producer and as financially responsible for production. Alas for the play! the dear old 'Jonah' did not appear again; it was only a thumbnail sketch by the author."

Vezin's Generosity.

A REASON why Hermann Vezin died poor, writes "An Actor," is that he gave as fast as he received. In my knowledge is an example of his kind heart. A pupil of his, having lost her father, became suddenly poor. Vezin insisted on her taking back every penny her father had paid him. With Vezin at any rate it was not a case of "benefits forgot."

The Use of the Theatre.

"THE longest discourses, the most earnest theories," writes "An Englishman" in the Daily Mail, cannot change the truth that the theatre is a pleasure-house. We go there for our delight, to indulge our sense of art, not to pick up the lessons of a trite morality. Mr. Barker, indeed, is as far from the artistry of the stage as the purveyor of musical comedy. We prize the inapposite preacher as little as we prize the antic buffoon. We refuse to put new duties upon the theatre at the bidding of 'progress.' The drama must grow in accord with with its history and its traditions. It can achieve success only by the wise treatment of its materials. It must forget the lesson taught industriously for half a misguided century that it is nothing better than a clothes-peg. Two trestles, two actors, and a passion may still suffice for our pleasure. And George Meredith's fragment, beautifully rendered not long since at Mr. Frohman's theatre, has proved how exquisite is the joy of diction, of words written by a poet, not to be read, but to be heard. Here, then, is the dramatist's path of safety—to follow always the behests of his art and to remember that he is at his worst when he tries most zealously to 'do good.'"

Room for Improvement.

MR. WILLIAM ARCHER writes in reply: "Under the constitution drawn up by the committee of the National Theatre the selection of plays will be in the hands of a body above suspicion of literary favouritism, before which the works of Mr. Barker and Mr. Shaw will have no initial advantage over those of any other dramatists. 'An Englishman' makes play with the old fallacy that in art 'progress is impossible.' It is quite true that we shall scarcely produce plays much better in their way than the Agamemnon, or Macbeth, or Le Misanthrope, but it is equally true that the English drama has progressed enormously since, say, 1860, and that there is plenty of room for it to progress as far again in the coming half-century."

More Vezin Notes.

MR. HERMANN VEZIN, in an interview with a representative of the Yorkshire Herald once said: "I remember once rehearsing in a stock company at York from ten o'clock in the morning to six in the evening, and I had three small speaking parts to play during that time. We used to produce half a dozen pieces in a week, chiefly Shakespeare, which we were all supposed to know. John Langford Pritchard was the manager. Each man and woman was engaged for a certain line of business. There were the leading man, and second 'heavy,' the low and the light comedians, &c. Sims Reeves was the 'singing walking gentleman' at the theatre just before I came, before he visited Italy to study. The singing chambermaid actress, for instance, generally had to play Ophelia because of the songs. It was in her line of part. The Royal Theatre (a tumbledown sort of place) was part of the York, Leeds, and Hull Circuit. I joined at York, and went to Leeds afterwards. I suppose I was on the circuit a couple of months. Then I left and returned to London."

The Star System.

"MR. AND MRS. CHARLES KEAN visited York for a week during my stay. In those days the star used to come round and play with the company he found in the particular town. We would rehearse the play before he arrived, and then again with the star in the cast. Among others who came were Sam Emery (the father of Mrs. Cyril Maude) and Creswick, who played King Lear." "What was your part in Lear?" the veteran actor was asked. "Half his army," was the laughing reply.

An Odd Play.

"A MAN named George Owen," he related, "came to York when I was there, with a play he had written. There was only the manuscript of the play in existence. There were no parts, and that manuscript was handed round first to the leading lady, then to the leading men, and so on, down to the smaller people, each copying out his part. The play was a dreadful failure. Owen himself, who did not appear in the piece, observed: 'This play may succeed, but it wont be mine,' so much was it altered by the actors. They put in all sorts of things, and I recall that the comic old man had to play a serious old man, and was annoyed at that. The name of the piece I have forgotten, but it was something historical about a war between Sweden and Norway. But just think of producing a play in that way—not any parts, and not giving the actors more than one rehearsal."

In a Rally.

MR. VEZIN said the first thing he had to do at York was to go on as a soldier. He also took part in the "rally scene" in the pantomime, when everyone on the stage threw fish, carrots, &c., at each other. It was supposed to be very comic. "Was it?"—No; though a man named Fraser was very clever as a clown." "The very best thing I did in York," said Mr. Vezin reflectively, "was Balthazar in Much Ado About Nothing. My next engagement was at Southampton at 10s. a week. There I played in London Assurance, and had good parts, especially with Kean."

The String Did It.

THE Reading Committee of the Comédie-Française, abolished in 1901, has been re-established, and dramatic authors will once again read their works before this select body of actors—and also actresses, for two lady members have been nominated. Apropos of this, a writer in T.P.'s Weekly reminds us that Théodore de Banville demanded "a hundred thousand eternities" to guess why, in his day, the fair sex was debarred from membership. Arsène Houssaye (the gifted father of the author of "1815"), who was chairman of the Reading Committee, relates how Mlle. Anaïs asked an unhappy author, who had already recited three acts of his drama, "whether it was in verse"; and in the days of the Restoration a lady member confided to a dramatist that she had given him a favourable vote "because his MS. was tied up with a simple string." "So it was the string which moved the jumping-jack," he ungallantly retorted.

Technically the performance of Billy's Bargain at the Garrick Theatre was not its "first in London," for Mr. "Robert Lascelles'" piece, under the title of Billy Rotterford's Descent, was tried at the King's Theatre, Hammersmith, on May 11, 1908, after being produced at the Theatre Royal, Birmingham, on Oct. 25, 1907, under the title of Among the Brigands. Mr. Weedon Grossmith is no novice as a playwright, and his pieces A Commission and The Night of the Party are well known for their cleverness and their success. In Billy's Bargain Mr. Grossmith has given his imagination a free rein, and the result is a very amusing, and at times vigorously exciting, entertainment.

Billy Rotterford, the son of an American millionaire, is in serious financial difficulties, and meditates bankruptcy, when his friend, Aubrey Colpoys, a sharp and enterprising young man, suggests a plan by which the amount of Billy's debts may be extracted from Rotterford père. Colpoys has met in London a certain Vanderhousan, the second in command of a band of brigands in the Caucasus. Colpoys suggests that Billy, who is about to travel with his father and step-mother in those mountains, shall be captured by the band, and a large ransom demanded of his father, half of which will be sufficient to pay Billy's debts.

The next act shows us the Rotterfords in a very primitive hotel near the Caspian Sea. The food is execrable, the wine is undrinkable, and the other guests are an egoistical invalid and a Russian lady who flies into passions and kicks people's legs. Billy is hourly expecting to be kidnapped by the brigands, and excites his father's suspicion by the preparations he makes for his departure. Vanderhousan and his friends arrive, and Billy, assuming an heroic attitude, assumes his father's identity and is dragged away; but not without J. K. Rotterford seeing through the trick.

In the second division of this act we see Billy in the brigands' fortress in the mountains. He does not realise the seriousness of his position, and flirts gaily with Vera, the wife of Vanderhousan, making himself quite popular with the brigands. But business is business, and when it appears that Rotterford père is adamant, and that no ransom is forthcoming, Billy is bidden to prepare for death. Jealousy arises between Vanderhousan and Zampassa, the chief of the brigands, and the latter makes the whole of his men disarm. This annoys the second in command, and he engages in a duel with Zampassa, who, by pretending to be dying, distracts Vanderhousan's attention, and then shoots him dead from behind. This incident, however, does not prevent Billy from being seized by the brigands and thrown over a high precipice.

In the last act, having miraculously escaped death by descending amidst a flock of geese, and then falling on some soft snow, Billy returns to his parents, who are mourning for him in London. Billy disguises himself as a brigand, raids his father's house, forces him to disgorge his wealth, and regains his favour. Vanderhousan's death leaves Vera free to marry Billy; she comes to London, and they are betrothed. Billy's father, of course, relents, and all ends happily.

The audience applauded loudly at the end of each act, and at the conclusion, when Mr. Weedon Grossmith, in a brief speech, admitted the responsibility of its authorship. Mr. Grossmith was very quaint and comic in the character of Billy Rotterford, the well-sustained ease of his demeanour and the jaunty cheerfulness of his general air and expression making a very amusing and agreeable effect. Mr. John Clulow lent the necessary weight and seriousness to the rôle of J. K. Rotterford, and made the stern parent very strong and stubborn indeed; and Miss Fortescue was charmingly amiable as Mrs. J. K. Rotterford, Billy's intelligent stepmother. Mr. Wilfrid Forster hit off effectively the ingenious and athletic Aubrey Colpoys; and Mr. Oswald Marshall was clever and characteristic as Kelly, an American traveller, who comes to the Caucasus in search of performing bears. Mr. Arthur B. Murray spoke his after-dinner oration in the first act ably as Sir Richard Mulberry; and Miss Lynn Fontanne was really droll as the inane and affected Lady Mulberry. Mr. Sebastian Smith contributed a neat character-sketch as "Baron" Harper, Miss Annie Hill was forcibly comic as the Tartar lady, Madam Garvarnavitch, and Mr. Frank Leach was a picturesque Caucasian landlord. Two bold and strong performances were supplied by Mr. Arthur Chesney as Zampassa and Mr. Henry Latimer as Vanderhousan. Mr. Chesney was dreadfully stern and tyrannical, and Mr. Latimer's appearance, with his tall figure clad in the elaborately picturesque Caucasian costume, and armed to the teeth, was very imposing. Miss Olga Morra as the child of nature, Vera Vanderhousan, acted with charm and spirit and with a naïveté which was most engaging; and Mr. Frank H. Denton gave a capital comedy performance of the fantastic invalid, Mr. Polting; neat "thumbnail sketches" being furnished by Mr. Cecil McGuiness as a policeman and Mr. Henry Nixon as a crossing-sweeper. The crowds of London revellers and Caucasian brigands worked with great animation and energy; and the scenery, especially the mountain set in the second act, was excellent. The dances were arranged by the experienced M. Espinosa; Messrs. Roker and Cowley and Mesdames K. Denton and D. Ray leading the joyous "Kola." The incidental music was written by Mr. George F. Ford, and the play was thoroughly well produced by the author, ably assisted by Mr. Frank Harding.

DEATH OF HENRY NEVILLE.

The announcement made on Monday of the passing away early on Sunday morning last of Henry Neville will fall on the ear of old London playgoers like the snapping of another link in the bright chain of their early experiences. He was not long to survive his old comrade Hermann Vezin, with whom he played in Sir Herbert Tree's all-star cast of The School for Scandal in last year's summer season at His Majesty's, Neville being Sir Oliver to Vezin's Rowley and Lal Brough's Moses. Mr. Neville had been forced to take to his bed as the result of an accident, apparently slight in itself, but which, unhappily, was followed by grave developments. He had been removed to Seaford from his house in Queen's-crescent, Haverstock Hill, a short time ago in the hope of a restoration to his accustomed health, but the hope proved to be delusive.

Mr. Henry Gartside Neville was a son of the well-known actor and theatrical manager, John Gartside Neville, and was born in Manchester, June 20, 1837. His first appearance on any stage was made as an infant some three years old, when he was carried on by his father in Pizarro. Coming of military stock, he was originally intended for the Army, but his own inclinations were to follow in the footsteps of his father, and this he did by securing an engagement at Preston with Edmund Falconer. His early career was but the stereotyped history of most youthful aspirants to stage honours of his day and generation. From place to place he drifted through the United Kingdom, playing much in the North of England and Scotland. Later he joined a stock company in Ireland. Eventually he arrived at Liverpool, and thence made his way to London, where, at the Lyceum, he made his first appearance as Percy Arden in a revival of Dion Boucicault's romantic drama, The Irish Heiress, on Oct. 8, 1860, under Mme. Celeste's management. On Nov. 12, 1860, he performed at the same theatre the part of Victor Savignie on the production of Adrienne; or, the Secret of a Life. Afterwards he fulfilled a series of engagements at Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, and Dublin theatres; and in 1861 was enrolled a member of the company of Messrs. Emden and Frederick Robson at the Old Olympic, Wych-street, where he made his first appearance on Oct. 3 in Jack of All Trades, an adaptation by himself and Florence Haydon from the French of Le Ramoneur. Horace Wigan was also in the cast. On Nov. 10, 1862, Robson bade farewell to the stage at the Olympic in the part of Dogbriar in Watts Phillips's Camilla's Husband, Neville playing the part of Maurice Warner. In May, 1863, he was given a benefit, and seized upon the occasion to appear as Claude Melnotte to the Pauline of Kate Saville.

THE LATE HENRY NEVILLE.

On May 27, 1863, he made his first important dramatic success as Bob Brierly in Tom Taylor's drama The Ticket-of-Leave Man, adapted from the French Léonard, of MM. Edouard Brisbarre and Eugène Nus. Mr. Neville, who had already won a position in public favour, gained much praise for the earnest, truthful, and natural manner in which he delineated the struggles of a man who, striving to redeem his early folly, and to free himself from the stigma that has been its consequence, finds every avenue to a better life gradually closed against him. The play was eminently successful, and, generally, proved attractive with a London audience whenever revived in later years. His performance in the piece will always remain in the recollection of all old playgoers. He acted the part for over 2,000 times; by September, 1875, he had already celebrated its tenth century. At the Olympic Theatre Mr. Neville has won several other successes, of which the more noteworthy were Lord Penarvon in The Hidden Hand, adapted by Horace Wigan from L'Aïeule of D'Ennery and Edmond, originally produced in Paris at the Ambigu Comique, Oct. 17, 1863, Henry Dunbar in Tom Taylor's version of Miss Braddon's novel of that title, and Jean Valjean in the drama of The Yellow Passport, adapted by Mr. Neville himself from Victor Hugo's "Les Misérables." The celebrated Miss Furtado doubled the parts of Fantine and her daughter Cosette.

After a stay of some four years at the Olympic he joined the company of the Adelphi Theatre, and appeared there as Job Armroyd in Lost in London, a piece of acting that largely increased his reputation; and as Farmer Allen in Charles Reade's unfortunate dramatic version of Tennyson's "Dora." In the principal rôle of Put Yourself in His Place, Charles Reade's adaptation of his own novel of that title, Henry Neville's acting attracted favourable notice. He had evidently studied the intentions of the author very thoroughly, and his impersonation of the hard-working Sheffield mechanic was singularly life-like and truthful in detail. A memorable date is June 24, 1868, when he played Hamlet for his benefit at the Adelphi. On that occasion John Billington was the Laertes, George Belmore the First Gravedigger, and Carlotta Leclercq the Ophelia. At the Olympic, on April 14, 1869, he appeared as Sir Charles Pomander in Ben Webster's revival of Masks and Faces.

On completing his engagement at the Adelphi Theatre Mr. Neville appeared at various London theatres for short seasons—at the Holborn, the Duke's, and the Globe. In 1872 he appeared at the Vaudeville as Charles Surface to the Sir Peter of William Farren, the Joseph of John Clayton, and the Lady Teazle of Miss Amy Fawsitt. On Oct. 4, 1873, he returned to the Olympic as lessee, and assumed, in connection with that position, the management of the theatre, which he retained until 1879. The following list of noteworthy plays, produced at the Olympic between the date of Mr. Neville's first entering upon the lesseeship and August, 1879, are worthy of being recorded as an indication of his dramatic enterprise: Season 1873-4—Sour Grapes (Byron), Richelieu Redressed (Reece), School for Intrigue (James Mortimer), Clancarty (Tom Taylor), revival of Much Ado About Nothing. Season 1874-5—Two Orphans (Oxenford), Spendthrift (Albery), Ticket-of-Leave Man (revival). Season 1875-6—Buckingham (W. G. Wills), Clytie (J. Hatton), The Gascon (Muskerry), Home, Sweet Home (Farjeon). Season 1876-7 — No Thoroughfare (Dickens and Collins), Si Slocum (F. Trayne and Tayleur), Queen of Connaught (Buchanan), Wife's Secret (revival), Scuttled Ship (C. Reade), Violin Maker of Cremona (M. François Coppée and Neville), Lady Audley's Secret (revival). Season 1877-8 — The Moonstone (Wilkie Collins), Henry Dunbar (revival), Turn of the Tide (Burnand), Jealousy (C. Reade). 1878-9—The Two Orphans (revival).

In August, 1878, Mr. Neville entered upon an engagement to play Pierre Lorance in the drama of Proof, produced at the Adelphi Theatre. In the summer of 1879 he relinquished the management of the Olympic, and appeared nightly with the late Mr. Hermann Vezin and Lilian Adelaide Neilson at the Adelphi Theatre, playing the parts of Sir Thomas Clifford and Master Walter (The Hunchback), and Charles Surface (The School for Scandal). During the season he appeared at the same theatre as Bob Brierly in a revival of The Ticket-of-Leave Man. On Sept. 30, 1879, he was associated with the Patemans, Hermann Vezin, Harriet Coveney and her daughter Clara Jecks in the production of Rescued, by Dion Boucicault, an Adelphi drama with a big swing bridge sensation. He took part in the Old English comedy revivals at the Vaudeville, playing Captain Absolute in The Rivals and Charles Surface in The School for Scandal.

In Human Nature he began a long connection with Drury Lane melodrama. In that piece he played for many months at Drury Lane and elsewhere, and also for a highly-successful season in America, where the piece was known as The Soudan. He was a most effective villain in The White Heather. "I didn't like it at all," he said, "in spite of the success I managed to make of the part. Playing against the audience in such a big theatre as Drury Lane, with the revengeful 'gods' storming against me, made me feel uncomfortable, and I was very glad when for the last time I played the part of the unlovable Lord Angus!"

Other Drury Lane pieces in which he figured were The Price of Peace, The Prodigal Son, The Bondman, &c. On tour latterly he acted some Charles Wyndham parts, especially Sir Christopher Deering in The Liars. He also played Shakespearean parts—Julius Cæsar, the King in Hamlet, Leonato in Much Ado About Nothing, &c., at His Majesty's, and Brabantio with Messrs. Waller and Irving in Othello. One of his recent London engagements was at the Haymarket in 1907 as Colonel FitzGerald in Sweet Kitty Bellairs. He made his appearance at the London Hippodrome in September last as the Abbé in the sketch A Modern Andromeda with Mr. Herbert Waring and Mr. Leo Stormont.

About 1885 Mr. Neville established a dramatic school, in which he was instrumental in training many good actors and actresses. He wrote two essays on the subject—"The Stage: its Past and Present in Relation to Fine Art," and "Gesture." Among the plays that he wrote or adapted were Her First Appearance, His First and Last Benefit, The Violin Maker of Cremona, The Duke's Device, and The Great Metropolis, in which William Terriss collaborated.

As evidence of the value of his training in the old school of the stock days we may take Mr. Neville's acting in a matinée revival of Richard Lalor Shiel's tragedy Evadne (produced originally by Macready in 1819) at the St. James's on Saturday, Nov. 19, 1887. He played Colonna to the Ludovico of Lewis Waller. He was as a giant among pigmies. His presence "filled" the stage. Strenuous, earnest, impassioned to a degree, in the softer moods of the character there was a tenderness that was really touching. Mr. Lewis Waller was the only other member of the cast who distinguished himself. Another triumph at the St. James's for the deceased actor was his Sir Rupert in The Witch, by C. Marsham Rae, produced in November, 1887.

Henry Neville was a popular Mason. At one time he was W.M. of the Maybury Lodge, and early in the year 1886, in conjunction with Charles Warner, Thomas Thorne, Henry Pettitt, J. H. Clyndes, and others, he founded the Drury Lane Lodge, becoming in due course its Master. The highest honour in his Masonic career was reached by him on his elevation to the rank of a Grand Officer in 1898, being appointed in that year Assistant Grand Director of Ceremonies.

Mr. Neville was a man of many parts, outside his profession. As an after-dinner speaker he possessed a charm and a rich wit particularly his own. In this capacity he was ever in great request. Years ago, as member of the St. George's Rifle Corps, he successfully raised, drilled, and equipped nearly an entire volunteer corps. He was a fine shot, and in his day he won the One Hundred Guineas Challenge Vase, a gold medal, and the Three Star Badge as the best shot of the year.

It is not generally known that he was the owner of the old George Hotel at Reading—a picturesque inn, which bears the date 1554 upon a shield over the doorway. "Here, in the summer," writes Mr. Harold Ashton in the Morning Leader, "he was never so happy as when entertaining week-end parties of friends and giving them enjoyable trips up and down the Thames in his neat little steam launch. On these occasions 'Captain Harry' always appeared in full maritime rig, with a smart yachting cap and blue serge to match. On these occasions only he was a bloodthirsty pirate, with an obedient though rollicking crew on board. Many have been the thrilling adventures on the wondering Thames under the 'Jolly Roger' of the lovable Henry Neville. And it was champagne that flowed—not gore!"

In the grey light of a very wet morning a little knot of the relatives of the late Henry Neville assembled at Euston Station soon after eight o'clock yesterday (Friday) morning, being en route to Oldham. It having been the express wish of the deceased actor that he should be buried in the family vault at Denshaw, near Oldham, Mr. Albert Neville, his eldest son, had arranged with Messrs. Beckett and Son, the funeral furnishers, of Kentish Town, that everything should be of the simplest description. Consequently, the coffin containing the body was of simple British polished oak, and was placed in a casket. The plate was inscribed: "Henry Gartside Neville, died June 19, 1910—aged 73 years." The remains were conveyed in a car drawn by four horses from the late actor's house in Queen's Crescent, Haverstock-hill, to the North-Western terminus, and were followed by the relatives in two mourning carriages and pairs, and two more open landaus, containing nearly seventy magnificent floral tributes. Three special cars had been reserved for the journey. The principal mourners were Mr. Albert Neville, Mr. Ernest Neville, Mr. Willoughby Neville, Mr. Fredk. Gartside, and Mr. Thomas Neville.

The following ladies and gentlemen sent wreaths:—Albert and Bessie Neville, Willoughby and F. Neville, Ernest and Jane Neville, the grandchildren of Henry Neville, Mr. and Mrs. F. Gartside, Lionel Gartside, Arthur Neville and son Thomas, Mary Dale, Sir Herbert Tree, Arthur Collins and the directors of Drury Lane, members of the Green Room Club, Playgoers' Club, Brethren of Drury Lane Lodge, Lodge of Verity, Jubilee Masters' Lodge, Moriand Lodge, Greyfriars Lodge, Reading West Bowling Club, Reading Bowling Club, Reading Philanthropic Institution, Chief Constable, officers, and men of the Reading Borough Police Force, Alderman and Mrs. H. ROYAL OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

Délibes' Lakmé was revived at Covent Garden on Saturday night, June 18, and met with a most enthusiastic reception. First performed at the Opéra-Comique, Paris, April, 1883, it has not been heard in this country since 1885, when performed at the old Gaiety Theatre, with Mlle. Van Zandt as the heroine. The music of Lakmé is charming, and although the opera has not been given for so many years, the famous "Bell Song" is sometimes heard at concerts whenever a vocalist has sufficient ability or daring to essay the difficult florid music. The composer gives just that touch of Eastern colour and character to his music in artistic keeping with the subject, while the numerous ballets are delightful—indeed, as a composer of melodious ballet music Délibes has few equals. The scene of the opera is laid in India during the nineteenth century. Gerald and his friend, Frederic, two officers in the British Army, accompanied by their fiancées, enter the sacred garden of a Pagoda belonging to the High Priest Nilakantha. When the rest of the party go, Gerald is left behind to sketch some jewels placed on an altar. Lakmé shortly arriving, Gerald is greatly impressed with her beauty, while Lakmé, daughter of the High Priest, on her side, soon falls in love with the handsome English officer; but Nilakantha happens to see Gerald in his sacred garden, and swears revenge.

In the second act, a market-place, Nilankantha and Lakmé, disguised as beggars, enter. He induces his daughter to sing, and the beautiful "Légende" attracts a large crowd, among them being Gerald. At a moment when the young officer is alone the old Brahmin stabs him; Lakmé, however, finds the wounded man, and with the help of Hadji, an attendant, carries him to the forest, which forms the scene of the third act, and here nurses him back to life by the virtues of certain wonderful herbs. Overcome with gratitude and love, Gerald agrees to drink some magic water, which will unite them for ever. While she is gone for a certain cup, Frederic enters and urges Gerald to be true to his country and the English lady to whom he is engaged, the sounds of a regimental march in the distance give force to Frederic's appeal, and when poor Lakmé returns and learns her fate she eats a leaf of the poisonous datura and dies in her father's arms.

Délibes' vocal music is full of melodic charm, either in the form of solo, duet, or chorus, while there are a number of beautiful passages for the orchestra. In the first act the opening chorus is very effective, and the quintet for Gerald, Frederic, and the three English ladies is particularly bright and sparkling. Lakmé and her slave, Mallika, also sing a very pleasing duet. The gem of the opera, of course, is the "Bell Song," but the ballet music is very captivating, and the English regimental airs cleverly introduced, while the long duet in the last act has considerable pathos, and in this scene the composer gives Gerald a fine solo when he is almost on the point of marrying Lakmé.

The opera is splendidly mounted, and lovely pictures are given of the Pagoda Garden, a bustling Market-place, and the Forest. As Lakmé Mme. Tetrazzini sang and acted magnificently. The "Bell Song" evoked a perfect storm of applause, and had to be repeated. As the composer has written for a high soprano, the music suits Mme. Tetrazzini perfectly, and the E in alt which finished the song was wonderfully produced. The entire performance, not only in singing but fine acting, was a perfect triumph for Mme. Tetrazzini. Mr. John McCormack also seemed inspired by his distinguished companion, and as Gerald never sang better or with more beauty of tone and expression. Mr. Edmund Burke imparted dignity to his impersonation of the priest Nilakantha, and he sang with admirable fervour in the appeal to Lakmé. As Frederic M. Crabbé was excellent, and in the part of Mallika Mlle. Bourgeois sang well. The English ladies, Ellen, Rose, and Mrs. Benson, were ably undertaken by Mlle. Symiane, Mlle. Egener, and Mme. Bérat, and the little part of Hadji by Signor Zucchi, while in the pretty ballets Mlle. Opalfvens had ample opportunity for displaying her talent. Chorus and orchestra deserved special praise, and the quaint picturesque costumes were very striking. Signor Campanini conducted sympathetically, and Lakmé proved a distinct success.

MISS ALICE CRAWFORD has been telling the Daily Mirror that there is trouble brewing in the theatrical world owing to the large number of tall, "majestic" actresses and the equally large number of small actors or actor-managers who persist in playing heroic parts. As it is impossible for a small or middle-sized actor to make love to a woman while looking up to her and still preserve his dignity, tall actresses are finding it very hard to obtain permanent employment on the stage. The small, petite actress, on the other hand, says Miss Crawford, is in great demand.

"IT is a curious fact," she says, "that small or middle-sized actors have a passion for playing heroic parts, thus necessitating a heroine of corresponding smallness. Imagine, for instance, a love-scene between a very tall woman and a short man—it would be absurd. A short actress is therefore engaged for such a part. Even if the woman is the same height as the man she looks much bigger owing to her hat or train.

"TALL actresses are nearly always in demand at His Majesty's Theatre for three reasons. They are frequently having big productions, the stage is big and—Sir Herbert Tree is a tall man. My own height is 5ft. 8in., so I suppose I must rank as a tall actress. The majority of my most important parts have been played at His Majesty's Theatre. Not until the stage produces a really tall set of actors can actresses who are above the average height come into their own."

SOME well-known actresses who are above the average height are the following:—Miss Constance Collier, Miss Violet Vanbrugh, Miss Alice Crawford, Miss Julia Neilson, Miss Dorothea Baird, and Miss Viola Tree.

AT Chelmsford, on the 17th inst., an application was made on behalf of Thomas Cotterill for a licence authorising the public performance of stage plays in a building to be erected on the King's Head Meadow, Chelmsford. It was stated that the plans had been approved by the Chelmsford Town Council, and that a similar building had been erected in other parts of the country, and authorised for the performance of stage plays. The Bench granted the licence for three months.

IRISH NATIONAL THEATRE.

An experiment of some interest was made by the Irish company on Friday, the 17th inst, when the Pilgrim Players, an earnest band of Thespians hailing from Birmingham, were admitted to the programme, and presented Mr. W. B. Yeats' one-act play, The King's Threshold. The visitors are to be congratulated upon the elaborate way in which they staged and dressed the work, and upon the care and sincerity displayed in its performance. The piece, it may be remembered, was given by the Dublin Society during their visit in 1904, so that its plot will be familiar, but it may briefly be said that it is the story of the Irish poet Seanchan, who has been deposed from his place at King Guaire's table, and resents the indignity by taking up a position on the steps of the Palace and refusing to eat or drink till his old-time privilege shall be restored. Threats and entreaties are used to induce Seanchan to yield, but even though the Princesses bring him meat and drink, and the King himself comes to plead, urging that it is his nobles that compelled him to make the obnoxious restriction, Seanchan remains firm. Finally the King brings the poet's pupils with halters round their necks ready to be hanged if their master does not give way; but when the pupils all in turn exhort Seanchan to die rather than yield the King admits defeat.

The names of the Pilgrims were not given on the programme, but they are generally to be commended on a very fair level of excellence in the acting. Conspicuously well played parts were those of the King, whose appearance and delivery were admirable, and of two Court ladies, who spoke and acted perfectly. The chief part of the poet was not so satisfactorily rendered, its exponent being stagy and drawing out his speeches to intolerable lengths. A droll exposition was that of the Mayor of Kinvara, and two cripples, quaintly acted, afforded relief to what at times became a somewhat tedious performance.

The rest of the programme consisted of three one-act pieces, two of which have done duty before this season. In the Shadow of the Glen, by the late J. M. Synge, also had a place in the bill, and proved as diverting as ever. Mr. Arthur Sinclair was irresistibly funny as the old farmer who feigns death in order to find out whether his spouse really loves him. Miss Maire O'Neill realised as completely as possible the romantic though eminently practical young wife, and Mr. J. A. O'Rourke as a shepherd and Mr. J. M. Kerrigan as a tramp supplied two different varieties of character in clever style. The other two selections were Kathleen ni Houlihan and The Rising of the Moon, with the same casts as those recently noticed. The house was full, the pit especially being closely crowded.

"THE BUILDING FUND."

Mrs. Grogan ..... Miss Sara Allgood
Shan Grogan ..... Mr. Arthur Sinclair
Sheila O'Dwyer ..... Miss Maire O'Neill
Michael O'Callaghan ..... Mr. J. A. O'Rourke
Dan Macsweeney ..... Mr. Fred O'Donovan

Those who have steadily followed the remarkable series of plays presented during the past week or so at the Court Theatre by the players from the Abbey Theatre, Dublin, have been struck by the inequality of the works. This possibly was best instanced last Saturday night, when Mr. William Boyle's delightful three-act comedy, The Building Fund, and Mr. W. B. Yeats' one-act play, The King's Threshold, shared the bill. In the one we get a true sample of Irish wit, well staged, well acted, and in the other a sombre imaginative effort that is always more or less "in the clouds."

The story of The Building Fund is a simple one, and deals with an aspect of life that is by no means confined to the Emerald Isle. Mrs. Grogan is a miserly old woman. Her son Shan is equally if not more mean than his mother. Consequently, when Michael O'Callaghan and Dan Macsweeney call to ask for a contribution to the building fund of the local church, they meet with rebuff. Sheila O'Dwyer is Mrs. Grogan's granddaughter, and enters "Granny's" service with the avowed intention of winning her way into the old lady's graces, and participating in the Grogan fortune when the old miser shall die. Everyone concerned has a selfish motive. Mrs. Grogan dies and leaves a will that startles everyone with its conditions.

The Building Fund is one great laugh from start to finish. It is splendidly written, splendidly staged, and splendidly acted. Miss Sara Allgood as the miserly old woman presented a really remarkable study of a suspicious and querulous old Irishwoman. Her brogue was perfect, and her petulancy as natural as could be. Mr. Arthur Sinclair and Miss Maire O'Neill acted very finely as son and grandchild respectively, and Messrs. J. O'Rourke and F. O'Donovan as the collectors for "his rivirinsis's" new chapel, suggested in convincing fashion the combination of blarney and business-like briskness that is to be found in the Irish character.

Mr. Yeats' King's Threshold was performed by the Pilgrim Players, a body of earnest amateurs from Birmingham, which, starting from the same small beginning, have adopted methods similar to those of the Irish Players, but chosen poetical drama for its speciality. We are told that "its principal successes have been Eager Heart, The Interlude of Youth, a mediæval morality, Fletcher's Scornful Lady, Measure for Measure, and The King's Threshold. The Irish Players had intended to perform this last play in London, but, owing to the number of plays they have had to rehearse, had to give up the intention, and were glad to bring before their audience instead the work of fellow-artists who have tried, as they themselves have tried, to represent poetical drama with much care for its music, and to decorate the stage as they have sometimes tried to decorate it while avoiding the attempt, which must always be a failure, to copy Nature literally."

On Monday, June 20, for the First Time in London, the Play, in Two Acts, by S. L. Robinson, entitled

"THE CROSS ROADS."

Mrs. Desmond ..... Miss Eileen O'Doherty
Mrs. McCarthy ..... Miss Maire O'Neill
Brian Connor ..... Mr. Fred O'Donovan
Ellen McCarthy ..... Miss Sara Allgood
Mike Dempsey ..... Mr. J. M. Kerrigan
Tom Dempsey ..... Mr. Arthur Sinclair

Except for a bright and brief scene at the opening there is little that is characteristically Irish in the above play, which might, indeed, be representative of the English agricultural districts just as well—or better—than those of the sister isle. There is a good deal of the penny novelette flavour about both story and dialogue, but some powerful situations are gained, together with a conclusion that is very impressive if undecisive. As in Harvest, Mr. Robinson takes a very blurred view of life, but he adds an element of the superstitious that puts the piece out of the pale of probability without increasing its strength.

Twice does the heroine of the play, Ellen McCarthy, stand at the cross-roads of life. She is a highly-intelligent up-to-date girl, who returns to her home in Cork, after a long stay in Dublin, with exalted views as to the improvement of methods of agriculture. During her residence in the Irish capital she has made the acquaintance of Brian Connor, a promising young student of literature, who follows her to Cork to offer her marriage. Ellen confesses to a liking for Brian, but conceives it to be her duty to marry a farmer in order to put her principles into practice; and, despite Brian's warning that love despited brings a curse, gives her hand to Tom Dempsey, a rough and uncouth farmer, exacting from Brian a promise not to visit or write to her for seven years.

At the end of that period Brian returns to find that while Ellen's new methods of farming have proved successful on every hand, in her own case utter failure is the result. The cows and sheep and poultry have perished by the score, and, moreover, Ellen's two children have both died of fever. Tom Dempsey attributes their ill-luck to a "black curse" which his wife has brought him. Brian warmly defends Ellen, so warmly, indeed, that Tom insinuates that their friendship in Dublin was not altogether innocent. The young man hotly resents the imputation, and grasping the farmer by the throat, has almost strangled him when Ellen returns and separates the two men. Brian urges Ellen to leave her home and place herself under his protection. The wife at first consents, but sees herself again confronted by the "cross-roads," and selects, as before, the way that duty indicates. Brian takes his final departure, and Ellen is left to the mercy of her husband.

More complete justice to the piece could scarcely have been done than that rendered by the little company. Miss Sara Allgood quite surpassed herself in her realistic depiction of the profound misery and pathetic resignation of the patriotic and disappointed woman, bereft of her children, her ideals shattered, and the victim of a brutal husband. Mr. Arthur Sinclair portrayed the hard-hearted farmer vividly, his delivery being little short of perfect, and Mr. Fred O'Donovan made a gentlemanly Brian, the quarrel between the two men reaching quite thrilling heights. Mr. J. M. Kerrigan gave another quaint sketch of an old Irishman as Tom Dempsey's father, and a conversation between two old Irishwomen was divertingly carried on by Miss Eileen O'Doherty and Miss Maire O'Neill, who acted the characters in finished style.

Monday's programme also contained Lady Gregory's very funny comedietta, The Jackdaw, with which Londoners first made acquaintance three years ago. The amusing incidents of the piece were effectively portrayed by Miss Sara Allgood as the embarrassed widow who is summoned for debt; by Mr. Arthur Sinclair as the brother who finds the money, but does not want his sister to know whence it comes; by Mr. Fred O'Donovan as the good-natured "know-all" Joseph Nestor, who arranges to sell the widow's jackdaw as an excuse for providing the £10 and sets the whole village bird-catching; by Mr. J. A. O'Rourke, excellent as a senile workhouse man; and by Mr. J. M. Kerrigan as a characteristic member of the community. The bill was concluded with The Workhouse Ward, the humours of which were again presented by the cast formerly noticed.

Miss Violet Esmond's New Burmaid company, under the control of Mr. Alexander Loftus, had a "ripping" time, both socially and artistically, at Dunnington (Yorks) last week. On Thursday afternoon the ladies of the company (fourteen in number) played a cricket match against an eleven of local tradesmen, and came out easy victors by 60 runs. This was mainly due to the excellent batting of Miss Veda (17), Miss Madge Prior (10), and Miss B. Dalmeny (12), and to the deadly bowling of Miss Vera Grafton and Miss Murielle Mascot, who took six wickets for 10 and four for 12 respectively. Other ladies taking part were Misses Flo de Ferny, Maggie Hughes, Dalmeny, Beatrice Earle, Mabel Snow, Maggie Chewd, Jean Adeson, Violet Hill, and Flo Hill. The team was captained by Mr. A. Loftus.

The tyre world does move

The B. F. Goodrich Co., Ltd. June 1, 1910.

Gentlemen,—I have pleasure in giving you my experience with a pair of your Metal Studded Covers which I have had on the rear wheels of my 18-25 Wolsley-Siddeley Car. They ran 2,700 miles before the first stud came out, and I am now sending them to be re-treaded after their having done 5,060 miles. They are easily the fastest armoured Tyres I have ever had the pleasure of driving.

Yours very sincerely, DUTCH DALY.

Are you sure that your tyre equipment represents the latest developments of tyre science?

The car you are driving to-day is probably far more flexible, more reliable, and more economical than the car you were driving a year or so ago. Have your tyres kept abreast of this advance?

If not, Specify—

THEATRE STREET, YOKOHAMA.

By FRANCES COBORN.

If the visitor to Japan were asked on his return his impressions of Yokohama, it is possible that, after the hospitality of the "foreigners," he would only recall the main shopping thoroughfare patronised by all tourists and the more striking features of Theatre-street. The newcomer who has preconceived ideas of natives living in isolated handfulls will be amazed at the crowds that fill the streets. Pavements and road alike are thronged, and walking is a difficult and sometimes aggravating business. There is no rule of the road in Japan, the native mode of progress is as erratic as a will-of-the-wisp, and nowadays the man in the street, despite the renowned courtesy of the Japanese, thinks nothing of jostling a "foreigner." Theatre-street by day is but an ordinary thoroughfare; by night it is pulsating with the humours of innumerable pleasure-seekers, willing to be attracted by cries of the loudest or most alluring showman

Entering the street from the town end, we notice the blaze of light outside a cheap bazaar of the "Everything within 1d." order. But it is hardly worth while to see it, and we pass on some hundred yards between unassuming shops and teahouses. There are two exceptions. On the left a showman calls visitors to the smallest, crudest panorama I have ever seen, illustrating the scenes and figures from the Russo-Japanese War. On the right of the street a spacious teashop attracts attention. It is a corner house, the shop open on two sides to the street, and the jars and canisters of tea ranged along the remaining sides of the square are displayed to the best advantage. These, with the straw tatami (flooring), polished woodwork, and the patient salesmen (probably the proprietor and his sons) create a lasting impression in the mind of the passer-by.

Almost immediately we come to the group of theatres which give the street its name. But first let us turn off to the right and see what the glare and noise here mean. The sound of the brass band is familiar; so, in fact, is the sight that meets our eyes This large tent covers a circus, and but for the unaccustomed audience and the fact that all the performers, too, are Japanese, we might be at any village fair in England. There is apparently no Children's Act in Japan, for here we see two baby tumblers, one supporting a barrel on his little upturned legs, while the second creeps in and out of it like a tiny brown kitten.

Now for the theatres. In front of each are displayed narrow cotton banners attached to long bamboo poles, bearing the names of play and players in Japanese script. In addition, some of the theatres display crude, gaudy pictures of scenes enacted within, which take the place of the posters and photographs shown outside our own theatres. One of the theatres is apparently the home of melodrama, for its pictures invariably portray nightmare horrors such as the Oriental alone can depict.

A sight that is almost certain to astonish the "foreigner" visiting or passing a theatre for the first time is the number of geta (clogs) strewn about the entrance. These have been shed by the Japanese before going into the building, and compel wonder at their belief in their fellow beings, also at the probability of each member of the audience finding his own belongings at the end of the performance. On enquiry, one learns that each pair has a wooden label attached, after the manner of our own cloak-room tickets, while the attendants "in front of the house" are supposed to keep watch against possible thieves. A story which is too good to miss is told by Professor Arthur Lloyd, of the Tokio University, of how these light-fingered gentry contrive to rob folk of their clogs while still standing in them! He relates how with a bamboo switch the thief tickles the foot of his victim, till the latter slips it out of his geta and raises it to rub it. Then the clog is deftly twitched from under him and an old one substituted. The same process is carried out with the remaining shoe, and the victim's "missus" is probably the first to find out what has happened!

The Kirakusa Theatre, with its occasional cinematograph and variety shows, is the most frequented by the foreign residents of Yokohama. Inside it resembles most other Japanese theatres, though the Tokio houses are larger. The parterre, or floor, is laid out in squares, very much like an enormous chessboard with inner squares cut out or sunk. The ridges thus left form gangways sufficiently wide for attendants to pass along with refreshments between "turns." The occupants of these boxes, varying in number from four to six, are supplied with the flat cushions invariably used by the natives for seats. One then sees the necessity for discarding the wooden geta, which otherwise would inconvenience both owner and the rest of the family party. They then settle down to the evening's entertainment, the matrons smoking their tiny pipes like any of the men folk!

Along the walls to right and left are the spaces reserved for "foreigners" and Japanese in European dress, the price of admission being "One yen, with chair." Above each of these spaces is another, answering to our dress circle. On the same tier and between these, facing the stage, runs the gallery, but "the gods" view the performance from behind a grille. The result, as seen from the balconies, is perfectly ludicrous, for the gallery resembles nothing so much as the cage of a menagerie (I dare not say aloud which one).

The pictures shown are mostly films by Gaumont Frères, and no evening's show would be complete without one or more of the inevitable chases dear to the makers of moving pictures. Horrors grim or grotesque are also very popular, but the climax was reached (of those I saw) in what the programme described as "An Accident of Christians in Sixteen Century," realistically illustrating various methods of torture in the Spanish Inquisition—even to the gore! The programme further informed us that this set of pictures, with others, would "impress the spectators with the idea that they are actually present on the scene of genuine performances." Unfortunately, the gentleman who explained the views beforehand—first in Japanese, then in his best English—gave the spectators to understand that they were witnessing present-day occurrences in Rome!

But the bright outstanding star feature of the Kirakusa Theatre is its orchestra, seated in a box on the level of the balconies. Four of the five instruments are brass, and their playing—frankly brazen! The drum booms, one cornet brays, another squeals, in the most exquisite discord ever heard: a tin tray and a pencil drawn upright over a slate would answer the purpose just as well. Certainly, the Kirakusa Theatre is no place for the sensitive eye or ear.

And yet I have heard, in that same theatre, on the occasion of a charity performance, music that would do credit to the best London house. Tokio boasts a string orchestra or some forty Japanese, who have been trained at the various conservatoire and academies of Europe. It is possible that the lack of good orchestral music in Yokohama caused us to over-estimate their success, but undoubtedly their playing gave the foreigners present the keenest delight.

Many visitors will prefer to watch the audience to the show—good-natured souls, easily pleased, and accepting all they see with the simplicity of children. Possibly critics and other superior persons in European garb frequent the great theatres in Tokio—there is no room for criticism at the Kirakusa Theatre.

In addition to the long cotton banners hung outside the theatres, famous Japanese actors have a much more artistic form of advertisement, and one which is, I believe, unique. While in Japan I was asked to obtain from England samples of material suitable for a front curtain, which a wealthy Tokio gentleman and his friends wished to present to a popular actor. It appears that a star performer has his own special curtain, bearing his name, crest, or favourite rôle in gold appliqué, and this is used whenever and wherever he plays lead.

One hardly expects to find in native Japan reminders of events in the London world of variety, and it was indeed a case of "Oh, what a surprise" for me when I first saw this motto painted in black letters on the white wall of a little wine-shop: "Two jolly (sic) black eyes"! I have since tried to obtain a photograph of the place, but, alas, the hand of the destroyer has been at work, thus providing another instance of the transitoriness of fame.

MASONS AT WORK.

The second meeting of the Chelsea Lodge No. 3098, under the new Master, Mr. Harry Bawn, was held in the Chelsea Town Hall on Friday, the 17th inst. As is usually the case, many of the members were unable to be present owing to provincial engagements, but all those able made a point of being present, amongst them being Messrs. W. F. K. Walton, George H. Dyball, C. J. Doughty, Ernest Leicester, Albert Nicklin, Angelo A. Asher, W. H. Atlas, Albert Felino, Walter Hitch, James W. Mathews, J. H. McNaughton, Douglas White, G. R. Ranger, Herbert Austin, W. J. Mackay, Ernie Mayne, Bertie Ralland, John Grant, Frank Hardie, Monte Bayly, Pete Murray, A. G. Harman, Willie Benn, Henry Mason, Ernest Dillon, Will Johnson, James Stewart, Martin Henderson, Herbert Chenery; also Messrs. Harry A. Gribben, F. W. Coupland, and George A. Highland as visitors.

In the course of the afternoon Messrs. James Stewart, Will Johnson, and Martin Henderson were initiated into the mysteries of ancient Freemasonry. Messrs. A. G. Harman and W. J. Mackay progressed another stage, and Mr. G. R. Ranger completed himself in the art.

CONGRATULATORY DINNER.

It will be remembered that, owing to the death of his late Majesty, the congratulatory dinner to Messrs. A. G. Duck, Stanley Fitch, J. L. Goldstein, W. Lestocq, W. S. Lyon, R. Manuel, and Isaac Seaman, was postponed until Sunday last, when over 100 gathered together at Frascati's to do honour to these popular gentlemen and distinguished Freemasons. The chair was taken by Mr. Tom Fraser, P.G. Treasurer of England, and there also sat down to dine Messrs. H. Passmore Edwards, S.G.D., Harry Nicholls, P.G.Std.B., J. P. Fitzgerald, P.G.Std.B., Charles Cruikshanks, P.A.G.Std.B., James W. Mathews, P.A.G.D.C., Rev. C. E. L. Wright, P.G.D., R. D. Cummings, P.G.Std.B., Newton Crane, P.G.D., Charles J. Quicke, P.A.G. Sup. of Works; Chris Hilton, Master of the Lodge of Asaph; Douglas Gordon, Hubert Harben, A. B. Tapping, J. H. Ryley, Charles Macdona; Hubert Willis, Master of the Green Room Lodge; George Highland, Arnold Lucy, A. E. George, J. J. Dallas, and D. J. Williams.

The toasts of the evening were proposed with eloquence and responded to with grace and tact. Mr. Tom Fraser introduced each distinguished brother in his turn, the only absentee being Mr. Wolfe S. Lyon, who is in Canada. The first toast was that of "The Health of Mr. Stanley Fitch, Assistant Grand Director of Ceremonies," who acknowledged it agreeably. Mr. Isaac Seaman, A.G.Std.B., was very happy in his reply; and Mr. J. L. Goldstein, P.G.Std.B., Mr. Robert Manuel, P.A.G.Reg., and Mr. W. Lestocq managed to vary the terms in which they very pithily and pleasantly expressed their satisfaction.

"The Health of the Visiting Brethren" was drunk, and Mr. R. Newton Crane, the Master of the Jubilee Masters, replied for them. Mr. H. Passmore Edwards, S.G.D., proposed "The Health of the Chairman," which was drunk with musical honours, and Mr. Tom Fraser, in responding, expressed the pleasure he had experienced in presiding over such a distinguished assembly of his brethren met to congratulate such a worthy set of men upon attaining the position of Grand Officers.

Messrs. James W. Mathews, P.A.G.D.C., and J. Percy Fitzgerald, P.G.Std.B., officiated as treasurer and secretary of the dinner committee.

A Copy of "The Era" will be forwarded to any address in the United Kingdom for six stamps.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. Rean has written a drama of very strong sporting interest, which will no doubt still further prove his ability as a playwright. The audience, an excellent one, followed the plot of the piece with great attention, and gave vent to their appreciation in frequent bursts of applause.

The story of the piece is briefly as follows. Sir Charles Deeringhurst has been going the pace for some time, and when the play opens is getting towards the end of his tether. Quartered upon him is Lord Lydford and his wife, Lady Cleodora, formerly a famous dancer, with whom Sir Charles was once enamoured. This precious pair are rapidly bleeding Sir Charles of the remainder of his possessions. He has made a match between his horse, The Reaper, and Lord Lydford's Cottonspinner, which is to be run at the Upminster Steeplechases. Ike Crawford, who is working with Lydford, has discovered an unknown heavy-weight pugilist, Tom Nutt, for whom he is anxious to make a match. Lord Lydford immediately thinks of Sir Charles's younger brother, Captain Jack Deeringhurst, who has just come over from Aldershot, where he has won the Army heavy-weight championship, to propose to Nell Vallander, the daughter of the delightfully fussy old General Vallander, and after taunting Jack with the difference between amateur and professional boxing, succeeds in arranging a fight to take place at the Olympic Club the night before the race. The articles, however, are such that they permit either Captain Jack or Sir Charles himself appearing in the ring. Sir Charles, delighted with the arrangement, makes a heavy side-bet that he wins the double event.

Lord Lydford has previously betrayed the daughter of Sir Charles's trainer and jockey, Jim Stoach (whom he recognised as a jockey who was warned off the Australian turf), and by working on the girl's fears, persuades her to accuse Captain Jack of the paternity of her child, and, then, aided by his wife, succeeds in getting Jack involved in a card scandal, from which it is impossible to clear himself. Sir Charles disgusted at what he presumes to be his brother's disgrace, decides to fight himself, and expels Jack from the house. Lady Cleodora holds certain compromising letters from Sir Charles, which her husband thinks may form an excellent motive for blackmail, and arranges to entrap Sir Charles and his wife alone. But Lady Cleo, who has discovered it was her husband who had betrayed the trainer's daughter, gives Sir Charles his letters back, and warns him of her husband's intentions. Lord Lydford returns, and, finding his wife has betrayed him, kills her. Sir Charles, who has gone to the Olympic Club, is about to enter the ring to meet Nutt, when he is arrested and charged with the murder of Lady Cleodora. Captain Jack begs his brother to let him take his place, as the articles allow, and after a hard fight succeeds in knocking out Nutt. Lord Lydford and Ike Crawford, who has lost considerably over the fight, are determined to get their money back on the race, and by threats of exposure of his past compel Jim Stoach to promise to pull The Reaper; but in the race before the match Stoach is thrown and brought back to the paddock in a dying condition, when he confesses all.

No one is able to ride The Reaper except Stoach, but Captain Jack volunteers, and carries his brother's colours to victory. On his arrival back to the paddock to weigh in he is arrested as an accessory to the murder of Lady Cleodora. Fortunately, Dolly Stoach, who has seen the murder committed, is at hand to clear him, and denounces Lord Lydford as the real murderer. Jack and his brother are reconciled, and the usual happy ending reached.

Unfortunately, through an accident to Mr. Woulfe's hand, caused by a bite from his dog, he was unable to play the part for which he was cast, viz., Jack Deeringhurst, which was, however, ably filled by Mr. Henry Parr, Mr. Woulfe playing Mr. Parr's part, Lord Lydford, in a highly creditable manner. Mr. Clifford Rean (the author) was an excellent Sir Charles Deeringhurst, and as General Vallander Mr. Fred Wilberforce fairly excelled himself. Mr. Leonard Thackeray was good as Jim Stoach, and as Ike Crawford Mr. A. Waghorn gave entire satisfaction. Mr. Edwin Coates as Billy Bettson and Miss Florrie Lyndon as Molly Jordan were responsible for the comedy element. Mr. Cyril Jarvis as M.C. and Mr. F. Brandon as Inspector Melville were very commendable. Tom Nutt was played by Mr. Alex Chrisp, a local gentleman, who gave a very fine exhibition of boxing. Miss May Irene Wright was very telling as Dolly Stoach, and as Nell Vallander Miss Josephine Richards was very pleasing. Miss Edith Lorraine gave a forcible rendering of the part of Lady Cleodora, and was the recipient of well-deserved applause.

THE ELEPHANT AND CASTLE.

The programme here this week consists of a pot-pourri entertainment, made up of four of Mrs. John Lawson's sketches, pictures, and musical and vocal efforts. Mrs. John Lawson is, of course, the attraction, and she presents in her finished dramatic style The Devil's Sunday, The Bride for a Living, Sally in Our Alley, and Woman and the Apple. Perhaps the best performance by this talented lady is given in the character of Louie, in The Bride for a Living. In this sketch Mrs. Lawson gives an admirable representation of low life in the East End, infusing into this character-sketch some really good comedy, while her dramatic situations are made almost unpleasantly realistic. She is well supported in all sketches by a good company, and it is hardly necessary to mention that the staging throughout is excellent. Mr. Tom Jones, a Welsh comedian; Miss Mildred Gibbs, soprano; and Langbourne, Ray, and Langbourne, instrumentalists, together with an entertaining series of pictures on the Bioscope, help to complete the programme. The orchestra, under the direction of Mr. W. Stephenson, have a good deal of work to do, and their selections, which are capitally rendered, are extremely welcome.

Mr. Editor.—Sir,—In your report of Opera House, Harrogate, June 18, you omitted to mention, yours truly, Marquis and Truly, acrobatic comedy duo.—Theatre Royal, Goole, June 20.

Presentation.—As an evidence of appreciation for her clever acting in The Soldier of France, and to mark her début at the Theatre Royal, Belfast, last week, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Osmond, on behalf of themselves and the company presented Miss Evelyn White (the pretty daughter of Mr. Will White, manager of Belfast Alhambra Theatre), with a beautiful dressing case, suitably engraved.

THE premises of the Star Music Publishing Co. were closed on Thursday, owing to the death of Mr. S. E. Strong.

A SPORTING MATINEE which evoked considerable interest took place at the Palace, Cardiff, on Wednesday. The competition was at 9st 7lb, and there were eight competitors, all of Cardiff, the referee being Mr. Ralph Ile. The first two bouts were rather uninteresting, T. Ryan easily disposing of H. Webster, and Young Eames of Arthur Condon, in two rounds each respectively.

THE third bout saw Ted Owen and Coles matched. The contest went to Owen in the third round, he showing the quicker footwork and better staying power. The tit-bit of the afternoon, however, as far as the preliminary bouts were concerned, was the fourth, in which Mahoney and Barry were matched. Both men showed clever sparring and went in for hard hitting. So well were they matched that a fourth round was ordered, in which Barry's harder hitting powers and flush straight-arm blows secured him the verdict.

THERE was a large gathering of spectators, including Mr. J. W. Cordiner (Dare-Devil Dorothy company), who is taking a holiday in the locality. At the interval the players and friends were entertained to tea on the grass in front of the pavilion, and mirth and jollity prevailed. A collection was taken on the grounds for the local hospital fund, which realised a substantial sum.

BEFORE Mr. E. Leadam Hough, senior official receiver, the creditors met under the failure of Frederic Baugh, described as of Cambridge-road, E., music-hall proprietor. The debtor during the past twelve years had been acting as general-manager of theatres. In 1907 he entered into a verbal partnership with two others, and afterwards ran the Palace Theatre, Dover, the Alhambra Theatre, Sandgate, and Grand Theatre, Sheffield, as music-halls. The last-mentioned was eventually run as a picture theatre, and the attributed his present position to losses sustained over those ventures. Early last year he ran a vaudeville season at the Opera House, Jersey, and as a result lost £120, and he had sustained an additional loss of £160 by running a variety season at a Croydon theatre. The debtor estimated his liabilities at £1,200, and his assets consisted of a little personal jewellery. The meeting was adjourned to give the debtor an opportunity of submitting a proposal.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT
FOR ACTOR AND COMPOSER.
By ALBERT A. STRONG, LL.B. (Lond.).
Mr. A. A. Strong has published a book on "The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer," which should be in the hands of everyone who is obliged to know about this perplexing subject. Dramatic copyright in England is in a particularly unsatisfactory state, and it is much to be hoped that ere long some more rational method of securing protection for a play may be devised than the slovenly and sometimes costly "production for copyright purposes" which is at present required. — St. James's Gazette.

THEATRICAL ACCOUNTS FOR BUSINESS MANAGERS.
How the Affairs of a Theatre can be most Efficiently Controlled by the Adoption of Systems of Internal Check.
By CUTHBERT E. SMEDLEY, Chartered Accountant.
Price, 3/6. Post free, 3/9.

All concerned with the business side of a theatre will find much useful information and many valuable hints in "Theatrical Accounts for Business Managers," by Mr. Cuthbert E. Smedley, published at The Era office.—Referee, Jan. 31, 1909.

"Theatrical Accounts for Business-Managers," by Cuthbert E. Smedley, A.C.A. (3s 6d., The Era, Ltd., 5, Tavistock-street, W.C.). The work of accountants has now been brought to a fine art, and in almost every branch of business a different system has been elaborated. The present work deals in a small compass fully and clearly with all the special features of theatrical management on the business side.—Financial Times, Feb. 1, 1909.

"Theatrical Accounts for Business Managers," by Cuthbert E. Smedley, A.C.A. (The Era, Ltd., London, 3s. 6d.), is a most concise and comprehensive little work, calculated to prove of assistance to the theatre-manager. It shows how the affairs of a theatre can be most efficiently controlled by the adoption of systems of internal check. Specimen pages of the books to be kept are given, and the chapters treating of receipts, tours, book-keeping, and accounts and audit will be found to contain much useful information. In the appendix is given "a form of agreement with artists for touring engagements."—Liverpool Daily Post and Mercury, Feb. 3, 1909.

In the appendix is given "a form of agreement with artists for touring engagements."—Morning Post, Jan. 27, 1909.

"Theatrical Accounts" (The Era, Ltd., 5, Tavistock-street, W.C.), we should say, is a very useful compilation for business-managers of our places of amusement. It is practical, exact, and analytical; it should stop leakages, and needs only good houses to keep it fully employed.—Sportsman, Feb. 8, 1909.

Skeleton schemes of book-keeping, &c., with explanations, showing how the affairs of a theatre can be efficiently managed by the adoption of systems of internal check in all departments. Contains also a draft agreement as between manager and artist.—Birmingham Daily Post, Jan. 27, 1909.

THE LICENSING QUESTION AGAIN.

The great licensing question, which had been allowed to rest for some time, has been again revived, and with a display of marked ability on the part of the agitators. The ball was re-opened by Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER at the meeting of the County Council on the 14th inst. Mr. ALEXANDER put the case strongly from the theatrical managers' point of view. As he very truly stated:

> The music hall proprietor was able to produce stage plays in his building, but if a theatrical manager proposed to give a variety entertainment he was called over the coals, and prevented by the Lord Chamberlain on the ground that he was not fulfilling the terms of his licence. The effect of this was that the music hall proprietor could do what he liked, and the theatrical proprietor could not. As was known to many members of the Council, there was an understanding in existence between the music hall proprietors and the theatrical managers, and it was only in cases where the friendly agreement was not adhered to that the theatrical managers would ask the Council to protect their interests. The Chairman of the Theatres and Music Halls Committee would doubtless tell them that the theatrical manager could always prosecute, but he submitted that this was a course which the theatrical managers should not reasonably be asked to follow; but when a conviction by a magistrate was brought before the Theatres and Music Halls Committee, the applicant for a licence should be warned, and, if necessary, his licence should be refused. . . . Until the recommendation of the Joint Select Parliamentary Committee became law, it was clearly the duty of the Council to see that the regulations, both of the music and dancing licences and the theatrical licences, were properly fulfilled.

MR. WALTER REYNOLDS, in supporting the amendment, had no difficulty in exposing the illogical and unsatisfactory state of the law at present, and quoted with great point the Camden Theatre case.

MR. GREENWOOD, who spoke on behalf of the Theatres and Music Halls Committee, expressed the feeling of the Council generally. The body is indisposed to move in the matter; and this was shown by the fact that only ten members voted for Mr. ALEXANDER'S amendment

A spirited attempt to "tackle" the licensing problem has been made by Mr. GEORGE GRAY, whose draft of a new licensing Bill we printed last week. Mr. GRAY proposes to make the County Council and the Justices of the Peace the only licensing authorities both for music-halls and theatres. It will at once occur to the reader to enquire how the difficult business of dealing with indecent, immoral, or offensive stage-plays is to be done. The County Council would, of course, decline to add duties so delicate to its already onerous responsibilities. So the Lord Chamberlain and the Examiner of Plays are to be allowed still to exist; but the power of directly forbidding the production of a play is to be withdrawn from them. In the event of the Lord Chamberlain's refusing to grant a licence, "the licensee or author, notwithstanding such refusal of licence to perform, may in any duly licensed theatre or place of public entertainment present, play, and perform such play." The Lord Chamberlain's only resource will be to forward a copy of the play to the Director of Public Prosecutions, who "may" proceed in the High Court against the licensee or responsible manager where the play has been produced and played, and against the author of the play. It will again occur to the reader acquainted with the law's delays whether the alleged indecent and offensive play is to be allowed to run till the hearing of the case comes on. But Mr. GRAY has anticipated this objection. Pending the decision of the High Court the performance of the play is to be suspended, and such cases are to be adjudicated before a Judge of the King's Bench, who may, at his discretion, hear such case or cases in camera. Then the Judge, if he comes to the conclusion that the play is indecent and offensive, will prohibit its performance for a period of ten years, impose various penalties, and endorse the theatrical manager's licence. If this endorsement is repeated three times in five years, the licence will be forfeited, and will not be renewed for five years following.

The great obstacle in the way of improving the present licensing law is the vis inertia which has so much power in a conservative country like England. In order that any change may be made it is necessary that strong and influential pressure be applied. Reforms are only made when they are demanded with such a union of forces that it is impossible for them to be denied. It was not until the music pirates had given object-lessons of robbery in every street, and a large, important, and honest industry was on the brink of ruin, that the Musical Copyright Act was passed, and that only by the happy fortune of a tenacious diplomatist like Mr. T. P. O'CONNOR being induced to take up the Bill. There appears to us at present to be hardly enough powder behind the shell of licensing reform to attain any practical result. It is true that by Mr. GRAY'S Bill the music-hall managers would be free to turn their variety theatres into "temples of the drama," and that the theatrical managers would be able to allow smoking. But the music-hall managers wish to adhere to the various and disconnected nature of their entertainments; and the theatrical managers perceive that the permission to smoke in their auditoriums would cut both ways, driving away one class of their patrons if it delighted another section. And the question of sketches at music halls is complicated by the recent appearances of several of our leading London managers in condensed dramas at variety theatres. It is difficult to be very zealous about the "great sketch question" if you have been making a good deal of money by appearing in a sketch at a hall. With respect to Mr. GRAY'S proposals as to the Lord Chamberlain's veto, they would simply transfer the responsibility of estimating the objectionableness of a play from the Examiner of Plays to a "Judge of King's Bench." At present, a manager can make a pretty good guess at what will or will not pass the Lord Chamberlain; but it would be absolutely impossible to anticipate the decisions of gentlemen, experts in the law, but certainly not specialists in a department new to them and quite outside their province. But the mere fact that such a telling speech as Mr. ALEXANDER'S should have been made, and such a masterly draft as Mr. GRAY'S prepared, shows what a fund of ability, outside their art, there is in the popular actor-manager and the "fighting parson."

"THE GREEN HELMET."

Conal	MR. ARTHUR SINCLAIR
Cuchulain	MR. FRED O'DONOVAN
Red Man	MR. J. M. KERRIGAN
Laeg	MR. SYDNEY J. MORGAN
Leagaire's Wife	MISS EITHNE MAGEE
Conal's Wife	MISS MAIRE O'NEILL
Emer	MISS SARA ALLGOOD

After seeing the dominating characters of The Græn Helmet, known in history, curiously enough, as the Red Man, one is forced to the conclusion that in the days of his youth this individual must have been most uncomfortable company for his contemporaries. Mr. Yeats' little play is short, interesting, and written in ballad metre—short, rhymed lines, that when delivered to the accompaniment of the Irish brogue are extremely pleasing. The Green Helmet has a charm of its own, and, although at times there is a difficulty in following up the story, is more of things earthly than many other efforts from Mr. Yeats' pen. It is all weirdly mysterious and very legendary, but it seems that there is a green helmet in dispute, and that it originally belonged to the Red Man, a supernatural being who has not been any too well treated by Leagaire and Conal, two very quarrelsome Ulster chiefs. One of them had agreed to cut off his own head in consideration of the Red Man's cutting off his, and after the Red Man had carried out his part of the bargain had backed out. But the Red Man picked up his head as it lay laughing on the floor and tucked it under his arm. The two chiefs, squabbling concerning precedence, are joined by Cuchulain, who is more than a match for them. The Red Man drops his head once more in its proper place. He laughs at them derisively, and leaves his helmet for the bravest of them to wear. They agree to wear it by turns, but quarrel badly about the right to be first to do so. Always ready for combat, their retainers and their wives join the "divarshun." The Red Man returns with a very terrifying Headsman in attendance and demands the head due him, which only makes matters worse. Cuchulain's public spirit gets the better of him, and he offers his head, whereat the Red Man at once crowns him with the green helmet.

During the progress of the piece "The Emer's Song" is rendered:

> Nothing that he has done,
> His mind that is fire,
> His body that is sun,
> Have set my head higher
> Than all the world's wives.
> Himself on the wind
> Is the gift that he gives
> Therefore womenkind,
> When their eyes have met mine,
> Grow cold, and grow hot,
> Troubled as with wine,
> By a secret thought,
> Prayed upon, fed upon
> By jealousy and desire,
> For I am moon to that sun,
> I am steel to that fire.

It may be said that Mr. Fred O'Donovan as Cuchulain spoke his lines extremely well indeed. But it cannot honestly be recorded that the other players were seen at their best in this particular item.

Lady Gregory's three-act comedy, The Image, was very well done on the same evening. Mr. J. M. Kerrigan was admirable—as, indeed, he always is—as the seaweed gatherer, Darby Costello, and the same can be said concerning the efforts of Miss Sara Allgood as Mary Coppinger, the wife of Stonecutter Coppinger, finely taken by Mr. Arthur Sinclair.

A DISCLAIMER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA

SIR,—In your notice of a new Irish drama, On the Shores of the Shannon, I am credited with its authorship. Although reluctant to dissociate myself from a success, truth compels me to say I never wrote a line of the drama, nor heard of its existence until I read your issue of last week.—Yours faithfully, C. A. CLARKE

(Author of A Broken Heart, &c.).

Richmond, Surrey, June 20.

MR. H. A. JONES AT THE GUILDHALL.

MR. HENRY ARTHUR JONES, responding for "The Drama" at a dinner given by Mr. R. N. Stollery, the chairman, and the Library Committee of the City Corporation, to meet the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, on Monday at the Guildhall, said:—The drama owes varied debts to Mr. Justice Darling. He has not only made a speech on its behalf to-night, but he has taken a more active part in its regeneration. Perceiving the comparative absence of high-class comedy on our English stage, he has constantly endeavoured to supply that deficiency by efforts of his own in a place where he is not subject to criticism. We may respectfully say of these efforts that they have met with a very considerable measure of success; indeed, that they have not fallen short of that high standard which English Judges usually attain when they forsake the dry formalities of their own office and generously set an example to English writers of comedy. Further, the learned Judge is a frequent playgoer. I saw him at the theatre a few weeks ago, following a stern indictment of the methods of English justice set forth. I thought I detected some workings of conscience on his features, or perhaps some uneasy suspicion that the whole fabric of English procedure is founded on a sad lack of brotherly sympathy with the criminal. At least we may hope that the exposure of the senseless and futile horrors of solitary confinement made a due impression on the learned Judge's mind. With my renewed thanks to him, I pass on to a brief glance over the general position and outlook of the English drama. It can, I think, be claimed that there are many bright and encouraging signs in the dramatic atmosphere. But it is a fatal error to dwell complacently on our virtues and achievements. To rest and be thankful is the sign of old age and decrepitude. I pass by our virtue and achievements, then, and I propose to-night to notice a rather disquieting symptom of the present dramatic movement. I say movement because movement implies life and activity. A noticeable feature in the English drama of recent years has been an assumption that the drama in the future must do something that the drama has never done before; that it must be pre-eminently a direct, explicit, and merciless expounder and enforcer of ethical, social, political, and scientific doctrines and theories. The English drama stands in great danger of being placed in the offensive position of a moral teacher. I beg my comrades and colleagues to notice the wise admonition addressed to us by Mr. Walkley at the dinner of the General Theatrical Fund a few days ago:—

"If the drama is to develop, it will have to develop along dramatic lines, shaping itself, like very other art, in conformity with its peculiar medium of expression. It must obey the law of economy in art, not run to waste by aiming at effect which could just as easily be produced without the apparatus of a theatre and the aid of a company of actors. And a play must always in the future, as in the past, be something organic and whole, or it will not hold the spectator's attention."

These are words which I think all of us who are writing plays will do well to lay to heart. This proclamation of the essentially doctrinal nature of the dramatist's profession becomes all the more alarming when one tries to examine the exact nature and scope and tendency of the doctrines propounded. It has lately been claimed that the national drama should make for righteousness—a general and lofty sentiment which commands our ready and unstinted approval. If the English drama makes for anything after the expenses of the management and the author's fees have been duly provided for, the surplus should unquestionably make for righteousness. But the further question arises: What sort of righteousness should the drama make for? And here there seems to be a likelihood of some confusion. For instance, a recent correspondence has started a horrible fear in my mind that the sort of righteousness aimed at is an income-tax of 20s. in the pound. I frankly own that isn't the sort of righteousness which I am making for, either in my private capacity as a citizen, or by inculcation in my public capacity as a writer of plays. Another burning question which seems to be crying aloud for drastic treatment in drama is the present arrangement whereby the nominal head of the household, amongst his other privileges, has the hitherto unchallenged privilege of paying that income-tax. And here I will make a great concession, and give away one more cherished masculine right—I will allow my own wife, or any other man's wife, to pay all income-tax without descending to any mean, petty squabbles as to the exact amount of our respective incomes. But I must grant that the struggle arising in the breast of the conscientious taxpayer on the question of the benefit to the national exchequer, weighed against the discomfort of probable domestic disputes upon pecuniary matters, offers a very tempting theme to a writer of the present type of pamphlet plays.

Once more, it has been suggested that the rules of Aristotle for making a play should be left out of account and thrown aside in our national drama. To the very able defence of Aristotle in this morning's Times I need add nothing. But I will, with great humility, offer a copy of Mr. Butcher's most valuable translation and commentary to any playwright who is anxious to learn how to write a successful play. And with all the emphasis at my command, I do, as a practical playwright, affirm and reaffirm that Aristotle's first leading rule remains to-day the leading rule whereby to fashion any play that can hope for permanent success. "The plot is the first thing," says Aristotle. Not the chief thing, but the first thing. Character-drawing, literature, ideas, philosophy, righteousness itself, can only be effectively introduced into a play that has already been provided with a definite articulate vertebrate scheme of action.

Further, it has lately been said that our national drama should be normal. And here I am whole-heartedly in accord with the dictum. I am tempted, but I will not be cruel enough, to inquire how far many of our recent masterpieces have been "normal" and addressed to the normal man. We all remember the famous dinner-party in "Tristram Shandy," when the theory was started that the Duchess of Suffolk was no relation to her own son. Uncle Toby was about to whistle "Lillibulero," but Mr. Shandy clapped his hand over Uncle Toby's mouth and said, "This is a very fine new original theory; let us hear what is to be said for it." Occasionally on the production of some new orignal play compact of brand new original theories akin to the one I have mentioned, I fancy I have heard from the average normal man a few subdued strains of "Lillibulero." A day or two ago I received an anonymous communication which purported to be the authorised programme of a very new and very advanced school of English drama. I will read out the titles of the plays which it is proposed to offer to the English public as soon as the necessary theatre and the capital can be found:—

The Soul of My Cat, an anti-vivisectionist dithyramb in one screech, two moans, and a curtain cat-call.

The Piston and the Flute, an essay in musical engineering, with some thoughts on barrel-organs and motor-horns, and full machinery and orchestral accompaniment.

Aspasia and the Magistrate, a lesson in practical impropriety, by One Who Has Tried It. Scene: Vine-street Police Court.

Dumping Analysed, a potion for free-traders, in four gulps of one scene each.

The list goes on to include a statistical play in defence of cremation and other appetising items.

I return to the admirable dictum that the English drama should be normal. If we take a swift view of art generally, of all schools and kinds of art, we shall, I think, be justified in saying that there is a constant tendency amongst young artists in every art to rebel against all its conventions, to rebel against the necessary and eternal conventions, as well as against the outworn and dying conventions. It is the same in poetry, in painting, in sculpture, and in the drama. And this perpetual rebellion leads very often to excesses, to perversities, to eccentricities, to exaggerations, to freaks of all sorts. The man who cannot do a sane strong thing will always do an eccentric thing, a perverse thing. If he cannot be first in Rome, he will be first in Little Peddlington. So that it is a good sign when we come across a recognition and declaration that the English drama should be normal and addressed to the average normal man.

I recently had a chance of speaking on the drama to young Oxford—to those who may have so large a say in the doings and directions of our future national drama. I found the warm, easy, graceful hospitality that always awaits a visitor to Oxford. I found a cordial interest in the drama, but I found a great distrust of some modern methods and tendencies. And I tried to assure and reassure young Oxford that our coming national drama would be normal, sane, exhilarating—an instrument of pleasure and amusement, and not an instrument of affliction and confusion.

But it is not only in Oxford that this mistrust and distrust of some modern dramatic methods and tendencies exist. That mistrust and distrust are shared—and I think justly shared—by a considerable body of English playgoers. And it is the great body of English playgoers who will have the final say in this matter. It must have struck the leaders of some recent movements that their efforts have not met with any general recognition or acceptance from the average normal man. They recall a couplet of Hood:—

> "But when the crier cried 'O'
> The people cried 'Oh, no!'"

Leaders of all movements, immaterial, political, financial, artistic, are divided into three classes. There are the leaders, who lead their followers to victory, there are the leaders who lead their followers into a ditch. And if [illegible] interpret the feeling of the average normal English playgoer at this moment, it is that he is being led into a ditch.

A comparison may be instituted between making laws and making plays. The learned Judge will, I am sure, tell us that it is useless to make laws away from the habits, thoughts, customs, and morals of the great body of the public, useless to make them much ahead of them, useless to make laws aside or apart from them in any direction. The wise legislator adapts himself to the general opinion of his average normal countrymen. So does the wise playwright.

A great movement is afoot for the recognition, organisation, and standardisation of the English drama. That movement is associated with the Mansion House and with the City of London. I will not now do more than express my hope and belief that success and prosperity must attend that movement, whatever obstacles and delays it may meet with.

I have said that the drama runs some danger of being placed in the offensive position of a moral teacher. For all that, any living drama will be, must be, a moral teacher. But it must not usurp the birch of the schoolmaster, the chair of the professor, or the pulpit of the divine. The drama is a teacher far more subtle, more insidious, more insinuating than any priest. But it must do its preaching and its teaching as if it were unaware of it.

The movement I have spoken of is started in the honour and memory of Shakespeare. Shakespeare has set us an example now to deal with the problems and controversies, the storms and fevers of the passing hour. He carefuly lets them alone. England was going through a tremendous change in religious thought and practice and belief. He scarcely noticed it. He dealt in the things that concern and unite general humanity. The promoters of the National Memorial Theatre will do well to assure the great English playgoing public that they need have no fear, that the scheme to honour Shakespeare shall be mainly shaped in the spirit of the broad, profound, universal humanity, the broad, profound, universal morality, the broad, sunny, universal common sense of Shakespeare.

AN APPEAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to make an appeal to the theatrical and theatre-going public on behalf of an old actor who has fallen upon bad times in his aged years? Mr. Charles Frome, as a child of eight years of age, entered the theatrical profession, under the tuition of his aunt (a famous dancer in her day), and has for nearly sixty years filled "many parts" in this country and the Colonies. He has appeared on the boards of the leading London and provincial theatres during that lengthy period, under the various managements of Messrs. Lewis, Hurdon and Wallace, J. P. O'Neil, Ward Lions, F. B. Chatterton, Charles Macarthy, Carter and Deeming, J. F. Warden, J. Heath, George Owen, De Frece, Van Biene, George Rignold, Wybert Rousby, J. P. Hutton, John Bunn, John Douglass, Murray King and Clarke, V. Esmond, J. W. Boulding, Mervin Dallas, Geo. Sanger, Pope and Hardy, and many other well-known managers. Mr. Frome, it may be mentioned, was, in the years gone by, the original Cardinal in The Double Rose, with the late Miss Sophie Eyre as the leading lady, at the Adelphi, and was for three years in succession at Drury Lane, under the management of Mr. Chatterton. In burlesque, too, he was the original King Hokey-Pokey at various London pantomimes. It may be interesting also to note that Mr. Frome and his partner, Mr. Cautrell Gibbs, were the first to utilise the electric light for the personal decoration of persons on the stage for changing coloured roses, &c.; which subsequently became very popular on almost every Metropolitan stage.

It may be asked, "Why, with such a record, does not Mr. Frome, in his distress, throw himself upon the Actors' Benevolent Fund?" Indeed, the writer has asked him this question himself, and received the answer that the Fund has in the past been very kind to him, but that last Christmas, at a time when he had an offer of an engagement at £3 10s. per week from a well-known manager, another offer at £1 per week to act as a super in another company came from the Fund. He, unfortunately, but very naturally, preferred the former, which, however, through no fault of his own, ultimately fell through, so that he was then "between the Devil and the deep blue sea." It seems that from that time the Fund has closed its doors against him, and he is now absolutely destitute, having but a precarious existence at Rowton House, King's Cross. Could not a subscription be opened for him to enable him to go to the Colonies, where, even in his old age, he might have a better chance than in the Metropolis?—Yours faithfully,

W. PAYNE.

REHEARSAL CLUB GENERAL MEETING.

The postponed general meeting of the Rehearsal Club (originally fixed for Thursday, May 12) was held on Thursday afternoon last at the St. James's Theatre. There was a very good attendance despite the showery weather.

Miss FANNY BROUGH, who was in the chair, remarked in her opening statement, submitting the report for 1909, that she thoroughly appreciated the Rehearsal Club. Years ago on the St. James's Theatre stage she made her first appearance in London. It was a very great trial, and had the Rehearsal Club then been in existence she would have been a much happier little girl. She congratulated them accordingly on the success of the club. She regretted through the death of King Edward the date of the meeting had been postponed.

THE REPORT FOR 1909.

The Committee have much pleasure in announcing that Lady Louisa Magenis has consented to become vice-president of the Rehearsal Club, with the cordial consent of the president, H.R.H. Princess Christian. Lady Maud B. Wilbraham has been appointed to succeed Lady Louisa Magenis in the chair.

In issuing their annual report (with duly audited accounts) the committee feel that it is almost unnecessary to dwell upon the need for such an institution, since the keen appreciation, displayed by the members, of its advantages must be a proof that it supplies a real want.

The Rehearsal Club was founded in 1892 with the view of furnishing a quiet retreat to which minor actresses might resort between the hours of rehearsals and matinées and the evening performances. Many of these actresses live too far from their work to admit of their returning home during the intervals; and in such cases warm, cheerful rooms, where rest and shelter from inclement weather can be obtained, together with refreshments at moderate charges, must be an inestimable boon.

Among those accustomed to view the theatre only from the auditorium, few perhaps realise the amount of hard work involved in the rehearsal of a play, or can imagine the strain on nerves, brain, and body necessary to produce the precision of ensemble and brilliancy of effect which they have so much admired. The object of the Rehearsal Club is to afford the much-required repose and shelter to those for whom health means livelihood.

Everybody who appreciates the theatre must feel that it is their duty to assist the hardest-worked members of a hard-worked profession, and endeavour to make their lives less difficult, remembering that their exertions have often helped to distract our minds from our own cares and anxieties.

OUTSIDE HELP WANTED.

It must be evident to all that the the club can never be self-supporting, and that a central position is an imperative necessity, also a costly one, so the committee are obliged to depend on outside help.

The committee have again to acknowledge with deep gratitude Mr. George Alexander's unfailing support and kindness in lending his theatre for the annual meeting, which took place on May 4. H.R.H. Princess Christian was prevented at the last moment from attending the meeting.

The committee desire to thank most cordially Mr. Beveridge for presiding, and the following speakers who advocated the cause: Miss Fanny Brough, Miss Lilian Braithwaite, Miss Rosina Filippa, Miss Eva Moore, Miss Irene Vanbrugh, Mr. W. L. Courtney, Canon Holmes, and Mr. Reginald Owen.

Warm thanks are also tendered to the many kind friends who by special gifts have shown personal interest in the club.

INSPECTION INVITED.

The members' subscription is 2s. per quarter. The club is open from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m., and consists of comfortable reading and refreshment rooms, also a resting room where the members can be completely undisturbed. The reading-room is well supplied with books, magazines, and papers. Anyone wishing to see the club will be gladly shown over by one of the committee or the matron.

Subscriptions and donations may be paid to the hon. treasurer, Mrs. Mayne, 101, Queen's-gate, S.W., or into the Victoria-street Branch of the London County and Westminster Bank "to the credit of the Rehearsal Club."

Miss CONSTANCE COLLIER, in proposing a vote of thanks to H.R.H. Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein for her presidency, said her Royal Highness had intended to be present that afternoon. She had always taken the greatest interest in their profession, and it was a delight to thank her.

Mr. H. B. IRVING seconded the vote. As a profession actors were always forward in the cause of charity, but even actors had to take a second place where the Royal Family were concerned for charitable works. They were very grateful for the sympathy and support of her Royal Highness in connection with the Rehearsal Club.

Canon HOLMES proposed a vote of thanks to the committee. He said the modern woman was described as the bloodless daughter of a languid mother. There was always one delightful note to be struck at Rehearsal Club meetings. The speeches were always so optimistic. The committee worked very hard, and deserved a hearty vote of thanks. In olden times if actors and actresses walked in the streets they were branded on the ear. That law was completely obsolete. The Rehearsal Club had taken its place. The club had been formed to keep the actors and actresses from wandering in the streets to-day. A girl who was compelled to wander about the streets very often was unfitted for her work through sheer fatigue. If girl actresses wanted to become full-blooded healthy young persons he advised them to join the Rehearsal Club.

Miss LILIAN BRAITHWAITE seconded the vote of thanks. She said that she was proud of the fact that many of the theatrical charities were entirely supported by members of the profession. The need of the Rehearsal Club was abundantly shown by the ever-increasing number of the membership. The club was a boon to the overworked and tired members of the profession.

Miss COMPTON, in proposing a vote of thanks to Mr. George Alexander, said that the dust of the boards of the stage was not sprinkled with rose-water. Their club was a haven of rest. Their club was trumps. Mr. Alexander had the interests of the Rehearsal Club very much at heart, and had said many eloquent things on its behalf.

The Countess of BECTIVE seconded the resolution, and said she wished there were dozens and dozens of such clubs in London.

Mr. LYN HARDING proposed a vote of thanks to Miss Fanny Brough, and remarked that he had noticed in the "Green Book" autobiography there were a good many parts down to the credit of Miss Brough, but he doubted if there were one that was more to her credit than the way she fulfilled the part of a good angel at the Rehearsal Club. He was pleasantly surprised on a recent visit to that club to find what a cosy establishment it was. But he missed the picture of Miss Brough at the club. He thought that should be remedied and her photo framed and hung on its walls.

Mr. CHARLES QUARTERMAINE seconded the vote.

A FEATURE of the new Palace of French Industries which is about to be built upon the island site in the Strand will be a bijou theatre devoted to the highest class of Parisian productions played by the best French actors and actresses. There will be a special entrance to the Royal box and its apartments. This theatre will seat an audience of 800.

VARIETY GOSSIP.

The many friends of Mr. Henri Gros will rejoice with him at the success of his son, Mr. Gustave Gros, who has just passed the solicitors' final examination.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Rickards have just reached good old London, after a most comfortable voyage, from Melbourne, on the Orient liner Orvieto. The happy pair were met at Paddington by Mr. Tom Pacey, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Harwood, his son-in-law and daughter, and The Era representative. Mr. Rickards will talk business later on, and intends to go immediately to his English home near St. Peter's.

Mr. Alfred Butt's pronunciamento in the Daily Telegraph has been anticipated by a previous declaration concerning the Variety Theatres Controlling Company, Ltd., of which concern he is chairman, with Mr. Walter De Frece and Mr. Walter Gibbons as directors.

As we announced in this page a fortnight since, Mr. Butt has secured a fine site for a variety theatre opposite Victoria Station by the purchase of the Royal Standard Music Hall—probably the London Hall extant—and five adjoining houses, with two shops. He has been working on this project for more than two years, and, having obtained a long lease, is going to make the new house a really magnificent place of entertainment.

"The entertainment to be provided," Mr. Butt writes, "will be different from anything in London. We shall cater for the middle-class. The feature of the programme will be sketches, operettas, and, of course, the best artists obtainable. The place will be fully licensed, and the prices will all be arranged on the 'popular' scale—that is to say, from five shillings downwards."

If all goes well, the new house will be ready by Feb. 1, 1911, the date fixed for the actual day of opening. It will be called the Victoria Palace, and on Monday the prospectus will be in the hands of the public. The shares will be ten shillings each, Mr. Butt himself is investing £5,000 in them.

One of the most successful playlets which has been seen in American vaudeville will be presented by Mr. Alfred Butt at the Palace Theatre on Monday. This is entitled An Unlucky Star, and serves as a vehicle to reintroduce to English audiences that gifted actress Miss Fanny Ward. It would be unfair both to the public and artists to outline the plot, but it may be surmised that in this tabloid play—for it is indeed such—the audience will receive a distinct thrill and a real surprise.

Miss Ward, whom we last saw in Jerome K. Jerome's play, Fanny and the Servant Problem, at the Aldwych, will be assisted by a specially-selected little company, and it is a matter of regret that Miss Ward can only spare two weeks in London, as she is due to go to Marienbad for the cure, her strenuous work in America having somewhat impaired her health.

Mr. Ernest Leicester has, by arrangement with Mr. George Bellamy, secured a powerful dramatic sketch, to be produced at the Camden Hippodrome on Monday. It is entitled Flat 13, by Arthur Law Raynor and George Bellamy, part-author of Slippery Jim and The Half-Caste. Mr. Leicester has just concluded a highly-successful engagement in Dame Nature, supporting Miss Ethel Irving at the Garrick and Terry's.

Miss Marie Dainton, together with Miss Nina Sevening and Mr. Fred Kerr, were amongst the saloon passengers of the Cunard liner Campania which arrived at Liverpool on Wednesday from New York. Miss Dainton returns from a very successful sixteen months' tour in America. She has appeared chiefly in vaudeville, and besides having performed at the principal theatres in New York, has travelled as far south as New Orleans, after completing a wide circuit in the East, embracing Boston, Philadelphia, and other large cities.

R. H. Kitchen, the father of Fred, Harry, and the late Dick Kitchen, celebrates his eightieth birthday to-day (Saturday). It is now seventy-three years since he was first apprenticed to Messrs. Frampton and Fenton at the Victoria Theatre, Waterloo-road, and he worked continuously for fifty-seven years, taking his farewell of the stage at the Theatre Royal, Woolwich, at Christmas, 1894.

He is now the last of the old English school of pantomimists, and was the most noted clown of his day, being deemed the true successor to the great Grimaldi. He was also famed for his performance in The Dumb Man of Manchester. His many friends will be glad to know that he is, in spite of his great age, in wonderful health and spirits, and full of reminiscences of the "good old days." He was very disgusted that his son Fred made such a success as the policeman in His Majesty's Guests, it having been the old gentleman's boast that he had never played policeman, that being considered in the old days quite derogatory.

The Sketch Association having received the report of the Sub-Committee on the Amusements Act, has instructed the hon. secretary to approach the various kindred societies, with a view to convening a Conference to discuss the proposed Bill, and to consider amendments and alterations compatible with the general requirements, and subsequently to call a general meeting of all concerned before submitting the Act to Parliament.

As a sequel to the engagement of Lydia Kyasht, the famous Russian dansense, at the Empire, Mr. Guy Berenger is claiming commission from Mr. Montague Leveaux upon an agreement dated June 20, 1908, and in the Westminster County Court on the 17th application was made on his behalf to deliver six interrogatories. These were objected to on behalf of the defendant, but the Judge said he was prepared to allow four of them

The Theatres and Music Halls Committee of the London County Council have considered drawings showing proposals for the reconstruction of the Middlesex Music Hall, Drury-lane, on the site of the existing hall and adjoining premises. The new hall will have accommodation for about 2,700 persons. Subject to certain conditions being complied with, says the committee, the arrangements shown on the drawings appear to be satisfactory, and a recommendation to that effect was put forward by the committee at Tuesday's meeting of the Council.

George Ali, the famous Drury Lane Cat and Buster Brown Dog, applied to Messrs. F. H. Jotham and Morgan Thomas at Cardiff on Monday, the 20th, for a licence for Master James Hollom to perform with him at the Empire this week. The latter is thirteen years old in August, and Mr. Morgan Thomas inquired whether the lad was receiving education at school. Mr. George Ali said when in London the boy attended the Chapel Royal School. The licence was granted conditionally upon Master Hollom being sent to school.

Mr. Wentworth Croke must be heartily congratulated on the enormous success of his new tabloid version of East Lynne, which was produced on Monday evening last at the Camden Hippodrome, which was so great that Mr. Walter Gibbons immediately secured it for his entire circuit for sixteen immediate consecutive dates, starting at the Grand, Clapham, on July 11 next.

The New Theatre, Oxford, will remain closed until August, when it reopens with a variety programme.

The Hippodrome, Lowestoft, of which the proprietor is Mr. Geo. Gilbert, is closed for a short season for redecorating. The local justices on Monday granted the proprietor a theatrical licence for twelve months.

After five years' service as resident-manager at the Chester Royalty Theatre, Mr. C. B. Fountaine is leaving the old Deeside city to accept a similar appointment at the Opera House, Northampton. He will commence his new duties on July 18. Mr. Fountaine will still remain the valued servant of Messrs. Milton Bode and Edward Compton.

During Mr. Fountaine's régime the Chester Royalty has undergone considerable structural extensions and improvements, but the most important event during the five years of Mr. Fountaine's managership was the granting to the theatre of a music and dancing licence, which, combined with the dramatic licence, enables the management to give its patrons every variety of programme—a condition of things absolutely necessary to ensure financial success in a small city of less than 40,000 inhabitants.

Prior to coming to the ancient city, Mr. Fountaine was manager, for his present proprietors, of the Theatre Royal, Leamington, and for six years manager at the Theatre Royal, Coatbridge, in Scotland. Previously, for eight years he was on the stage, and had a promising career. He travelled with the famous Majilton family in Round the Clock, and was general-manager for Mme. Bandman-Palmer.

A pleasant surprise awaited Mr. A. Douglas Willcox, musical director of the King's Theatre, Edinburgh, on Saturday night, when he was waited on by a deputation of the Students' Council and made the recipient of a handsome silver mounted ebony bâton, suitably inscribed, in recognition of his services to the Edinburgh University students on the Students' Night, held at the King's Theatre.

Almost a "general post" game has been played at Ton-y-pandy, where Mr. Stone has left the Hippodrome to take over the management of the Empire. Mr. W. Pearson, late of the Empire, now holds the reins of government at the Hippodrome.

Linn and Darius will produce their new number, "If he had a girl like me," written by Messrs. Amstell and Lesser, at the Hippodrome, Huddersfield, on Monday next. They have scored a great success this week at the Palace, Hammersmith.

The Luna Park Palace (late Kursaal), Southend-on-Sea, commenced the summer season on Monday, June 20, under the able management of Mr. T. W. Wright, late manager of the Grand, Gravesend. An excellent variety programme was well supported.

Miss Dorma Morgan sailed for New York on Saturday, from Liverpool, by the Arabic, with her husband, Mr. Herbert Raymond, manager of the Regent Theatre and Opera House, Salford. During Mr. Raymond's temporary absence, Mr. R. H. Lee, secretary, will fill his place.

The report of the Tivoli, Manchester, calls attention to the effect of the Budget which raises the licence duty in respect of the refreshment side of the house by nearly £390, an amount practically equal to a dividend of 1s. per share on the ordinary share capital of the company.

In order to maintain the dividend of 4 per cent., the directors draw upon the equalisation dividend reserve to the amount of £750, leaving that fund at £4,250, and carry forward £308, as against £312 brought into the account. The report calls attention to the high salaries now being demanded by artists, the depressed state of trade, and the increased competition from picture theatres and skating rinks as causes leading to the lessened results of the year.

At Ystrad County Court on the 16th, before Judge Bryn Roberts, Mr. Lacy Lyne, theatrical manager, sued Mr. Will Stone, proprietor of the Tivoli Theatre of Varieties, Pentre, for breach of contract, and claimed £26 alleged to be due to him. Mr. James Phillips appeared for the claimant, and Mr. D. W. James for defendant.

It appeared that Mr. Lyne was engaged to manage the Tivoli from March last, at a salary of £2 per week, this arrangement to stand good through the summer season, and on August Bank holiday an arrangement was to be entered into for commission on the weekly takings. Owing to a dispute as to advertising Mr. Lyne was given fourteen days' notice to terminate his contract, which he would not accept, contending that he was engaged definitely on a fixed salary until August. Judgment was given for the plaintiff for £20 and costs. A counter-claim was dismissed.

The Empire, Whitley Bay, of which the resident-manager is Mr. Thomas J. Gregson, is the latest addition to houses of entertainment there, and opened on Monday with great éclat, many of the principal residents in the vicinity being present at the opening performance. Situate immediately on the frontal sea promenade at the foot of the Esplanade, and on the direct road from the railway station, the Empire occupies one of the best conceivable situations in the district.

It has a gracefully-designed exterior, built of brick, with the upper portion in terra-cotta, and is capable of holding nearly 1,000 people. The stage is adequate for small plays and dramas. It has been decided by the management for the present, however, to confine their efforts to the exhibition of the profitable "picture" shows, with a diversion into variety. Webb and Branston, operatic duettists, are heard this week in excerpts from popular operas.

Councillor T. W. Rowe, last year's Sheriff, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and managing-director of the Palace Theatre in that town, on Thursday, the 16th, received a valuable memento of his year of office and the appreciation of his colleagues on the City Council, joined with that of a few personal friends, of the manner in which he discharged his important duties. At a gathering in the Council Chamber he was presented with a beautiful fruit and flower epergne, two silver fruit dishes, and a silver tray, while his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Robert Rowe, who performed the social duties attaching to the office of Sheriff last year received a handsome fruit dish. There was a large attendance of Councillor Rowe's colleagues and friends, besides a number of ladies at the presentation. Sir Joseph Ellis occupied the chair. The Lord Mayor made the presentation.

The friends of Mme. Grimaldi will be sorry to hear that she has been lying seriously ill for some time at Sunningvale, Biggin Hill, Kent, with rheumatic fever. We wish her a speedy recovery.

Messrs. Beecham and Wheeler beg to notify artists, managers, and agents that they have removed from 12 and 13, Henrietta-street, to more commodious premises, situated at Charing Cross Mansions, Charing Cross-road, where all future communications are to be addressed.

Mr. Celian Kottaun, for long musical director of the Mohawk-Moore and Burgess Minstrels, had the misfortune on the 20th inst. to lose his wife. The lady expired through cancer. Nine years ago the twain celebrated their silver wedding.

The Empire, Camberwell, has been sold to Mrs. Louise Cissie Lawson by Mr. F. Postlethwaite, the debenture holder, who has been in possession. Mrs. Lawson notifies artists and others that all existing contracts are cancelled as and from June 18, 1910.

Miss Gertie Gitana had a tremendous send-off from two crowded houses at the Sunderland Empire on Saturday last. In the second house she was compelled to sing seven numbers and give two speeches before they would allow the next turn to occupy the stage.

Miss Lillie Langtry, who likes Australia as much as Australia likes her, has just finished a sixteen-weeks' engagement with Mr. Harry Rickards, and has been secured for another twenty weeks by that astute entrepreneur. Miss Langtry has in contemplation a visit to America.

Messrs. Pain and Sons' great pyrotechnic spectacle, "The Fall of Pompeii," is proving a huge success at the Crystal Palace, where performances are given nightly at 8.30. This marvellous show must be seen to be believed, the realistic eruption of Mount Vesuvius and exciting chariot races being truly wonderful.

Miss Adele Levey appeared at the Alexandra Theatre, Widnes, for the benefit of Mr. James Kiddie on Wednesday, when she gave seven stories, two speeches, and three recitations, getting a very big reception and a lovely lot of roses. She has been offered the title-rôle, Dick Whittington, in the next pantomime at the Royalty, Chester.

Considerable interest has been aroused by the showing of a series of animated pictures at the Palace Theatre depicting the Empire Day celebration at Toronto. The chief interest in the set lies in the stirring example of the great cadet movement which Lord Grey has so assiduously fostered. On Tuesday night Lord Grey, the Governor-General of Canada, visited the Palace Theatre and saw the pictures.

Miss Melinda May, Secretary of the Music Hall Ladies' Guild, 61, New Oxford-street, W.C., on behalf of the committee, begs most gratefully to thank the following:—Miss Amelia Trapnell (Trapnell Family), giving and collecting £1; the Four Black Diamonds contributed 1s. towards a collection of 2s. 6d. made by Miss Mabel Mavis, per Mrs. Charles Coborn; Mr. James Fawn, 1s. (per Mrs. Chas. Coborn).

Will anyone please make an offer for the full set of fifteen large sized band books given by Messrs. Dennis and Morris (per Sisters Macarte)? Please note, a prize will be given to anyone collecting the most money for this deserving charity in twelve months commencing from Nov. 4 last.

Mr. George Robey combines with the serious duties of a music hall comedian the agreeable hobby of stamp-collecting. He appealed on Thursday from an order of Mr. Justice Bucknill, made at Chambers, giving him leave to defend in an action brought by Mr. Ginn, stamp dealer, only upon his bringing the amount claimed—between £200 and £300—into court. Eventually the Court allowed the appeal, thereby discharging the Judge's order, and giving unconditional leave to defend.

Mr. Jack Straw has gained possession of a most unique souvenir of last year's sports. It is a most elaborately bound album, containing all the actual photos taken of last year's events and groups at Stamford Bridge. He proposes to raffle the same at 6d. a ticket, and will be pleased to hear from anyone interested. His address is 212, Stockwell-road, Brixton, S.W. The proceeds will, of course, be devoted to the Variety Artists' Benevolent Fund.

Mr. Benjamin Woodger, secretary of the Music Hall Home, desires, on behalf of the committee, to thank Mr. Geo. Manners (Empire, Liverpool), 15s.; Bob Gates, 10s.; "Dekarro," 5s.; Brothers Miller, 10s.; Fred Neiman and Willie Benn (Variety Agency, 108, Strand, for office-box collection), 11s. Walter Norman and Fred Neiman have sent useful articles for the inmates. Men's cast-off clothes are always very acceptable. The next committee meeting will be held at the Three Stags, Kennington-road, on Thursday, June 30, at 12 noon.

We regret to hear that Miss Lola Lee, whose dancing was one of the principal features of a strong bill at the Empress, Brixton, last week, has had to cancel her engagement this week at the Gaiety, Chatham, as she is ordered by her doctor to take a complete rest for a few weeks. Miss Lee dances with such ease and grace that few realise the amount of hard work she has to put in, in the way of daily practice, and this during the hot weather has overtaxed her strength. We hope soon to hear that she is quite strong again.

Mr. Charles Coborn, writing from 40, Perran-road, Tulse Hill, says: "It is very pleasant to observe the enthusiasm with which the news of our forthcoming sports at Stamford Bridge next month is being received and responded to by those who sympathise with the lot of their poorer brethren. Since I gave you an account last week of the very respectable number of friends who had come forward, many others have expressed the desire to take part in the matter of prizes, donations, &c.

"Last Monday I met Bransby Williams in his handsome automobile going to the Empire, Holloway. I demanded 'a prize or his life.' He evidently wished to preserve his 'napper,' so he compounded with me for a five-guinea prize. I went with him to Holloway and tackled Ernie Mayne. When I asked Ernie for a prize, he replied, 'Have a banana,' but on my explaining that that would scarcely be an adequate reward for a hard athletic struggle, he at once surrendered and promised a prize. The Elliott-Savonas sent me two guineas, and our old friend Willie Clarkson is sending along a prize, as he has often done before.

Miss Effie Cook, of the Follies, was married on Saturday afternoon at the Old Parish Church, Aldershot, to Mr. Walter Harte Johnson. Several professional friends attended the church, and among the presents were a grand piano from Mr. H. G. Pélissier, furniture from Miss Ethel Allandale and Mr. Lewis Sydney, tea services from Miss Gwennie Mars and Mr. Harold Barkinshaw, a silver cake basket from Mr. Dan Everard, a Sheraton settee from Miss Phyllis Dare, and silver vases from Mr. Fitzroy Gardner. The honeymoon will be spent in Devonshire and Cornwall.

Miss Lil Hawthorne, accompanied by her husband, Mr. John R. Nash, arrived in Southampton on Wednesday on board the White Star liner Oceanic from America, where she made her first bow to a New York audience. Her success was instantaneous. If her English bookings can be arranged, she will return shortly to tour the country. Miss Hawthorne commences her London season at the Pavilion and Canterbury next Monday.

Miss Lil Hawthorne has acquired the sole English rights, fully protected, of the two latest New York successes, "You are the ideal of my dreams" and "The Billiken Man."

Miss Maud Esmond, who is scoring all along the line with "Ship Ahoy" and "Charlie Brown," has just concluded a twenty-five weeks' run in London. She will return on July 4.

The piece Music Hath Charms, by Douglas Munro, favourably noticed by us in our last issue at the Rotherhithe Hippodrome, was played by the author as Major Logan, Mr. Arthur Chesney as Banks the Bandsman, and Miss Beatrice Marsdene as Amy. Mr. Haldane Crichton has purchased the entire rights of the sketch from Mr. Munro.

Miss Valli Valli, the English actress, who made a success in Come Inside, the Empire revue, before she was secured for the title-rôle of The Dollar Princess in New York, is returning to the Empire to play the leading part in an entirely new version of the revue Hullo, London, which is to be presented very shortly. Mr. George Grossmith, jun., is entirely rewriting the revue, with Miss Valli Valli as the central character.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Lucas, at the Empire, Edinburgh, gave scenes from "Pickwick Papers," and met with such great success that they were immediately secured by the Edinburgh Marine Gardens to return for their only vacant date this summer, July 11, being engaged to present their scenes from Dickens and also their humorous sketches. The week following they go to the Kursaal, Harrogate, after which they return to the Stoll tour for two weeks, then take a summer holiday at their bungalow at Laleham-on-Thames.

Last week we announced the coming of the Six Ceylons to the Euston Palace. They duly put in an appearance, and so great was their success that they were at once secured through their agent, Will Oliver, for three months, to commence on Monday next at Birmingham, by the new Butt-Beck-De Frece-Gibbons combine. A Dream in an Opium Den is the title of the new show, and other proprietors will doubtless soon include this up-to-date novelty in their bookings.

The management of the Crystal Palace announce a music hall competition to commence on Monday, July 4. Several gentlemen eminent in the world of entertainment have consented to act as referees. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings will be devoted to preliminary heats, and two competitors each night will be selected to take part on Friday in the semi-final, the four most successful competitors to be chosen to compete in the final on Saturday night.

The first prize will be £3 3s., with an engagement for the following week at £4 4s., and the second prize £2 2s. An entrance fee of 2s. 6d. will be charged. Competitors are requested to send in their applications at once, accompanied by remittance and addressed to Manager, Music Hall Competition, Crystal Palace. The management will endeavour to make arrangements for those wishing to appear at any given time and day, dealing with such requests in order of their application.

Elise Craven will play the name-part in a new and original scena entitled Alcis, to be produced for the first time at the Empire, Liverpool, on Monday next. It is a story of ancient Greece, written by the author-actor J. A. Bentham, with dances arranged by Elise Clerc and special songs composed by Denham Harrison. A strong company has been engaged to support the little maiden, including Richard Norton as Crœsus, Sydney Kearns as Brutus, Bert Clerc as Cophas, and Mons. Martini in a special dance as the slave. The scena will be artistically and elaborately mounted.

Apart from her great gifts, Elise Craven is just a delightful, unspoilt child, and the author has created a part for her suitable to her tender years, suggesting an atmosphere of purity, and giving her only sentiments of childish innocence to express.

Miss Margaret Cooper, the clever society entertainer, who has for so long delighted audiences at the Palace with her charming and humorous songs, was married quietly on Wednesday to Mr. J. Humble-Crofts, a son of the rector of Waldron, in Sussex. Only one or two close friends even knew that the lady was engaged.

Miss Cooper motored down from London with her aunt and brother, who gave her away, arriving at Waldron a short time before the hour fixed for the wedding. She was married in a travelling dress. The service was non-choral and simple in the extreme. A little wedding luncheon was held afterwards at the rectory, and later in the afternoon the couple left in a motor-car for a quiet spot in Kent, where the honeymoon will be spent.

Her many public admirers will be pleased to know, on the authority of one of her relatives, that Miss Cooper does not intend to retire from the profession of which she is such a distinguished member. She will be seen again at the Palace, where she has delighted so many audiences, in September.

Spending most of her early life at Brighton, Miss Cooper was trained for the concert platform. She also studied the pianoforte and the violin at the Royal Academy of Music, of which she is a fellow. Then she appeared at several concerts before she accidentally discovered her gift of humour in song. Mr. Alfred Butt discovered it, however, and offered her an engagement at the Palace, since when she has never looked back.

The twenty-one Russian Imperial dancers at the London Hippodrome will be seen on Monday next in a revised programme. Only one scene—the second—of the ballet Le Lac des Cygnes, will be given, and this will allow of special dances being introduced for the brilliant principals. For example, Mlle. Ludmila Scholiar, supported by M. Alexis Koeloff and ladies of the company, will give the dashing Danse Bacchanale from Savanoff's "The Four Seasons," and Mlle. Olga Preobrajensky and M. Georges Kiakscht will be seen in a Mazurka and other graceful movements.

Principal among the newcomers at the Coliseum on Monday are Harry Roxbury and Company with his tabloid sketch On the Track, written by his charming wife, Miss Vashti Wynne, the music being by Dudley Powell. The play is arranged to depict the further adventures of Detective Longfellow, a character which Mr. Roxbury has popularised on the variety stage. As Detective Longfellow he puts on various disguises, including those of office boy, railway porter, strolling player on the beach, and an old woman in charge of a bathing machine. On the Track is presented in three scenes, the first being a matrimonial agent's office, the second a railway station, and the third a scene on the seashore.

The Queen-Mother, on Thursday, accepted a poem, dedicated to herself and his late Majesty King Edward VII., written by Fred. W. Lauraine (late of Hector and Lauraine), an old Alhambra favourite.

We regret to hear of the sudden illness on Tuesday at the London Pavilion of Mr. Billy Merson, who had to be taken home just before his number was announced. His indisposition, fortunately, was but temporary, and he was quite in his best form on Wednesday.

The X Rays are now counted as one of the acknowledged attractions. They have played one hundred and twelve weeks without a break, and have only one week free this year. Next is nearly as full, and a third of 1912 also booked. The provincial Press are loud in their praises of this truly comical entertainment.

Mr. Maskelyne has been challenged by Sir Hiram Maxim to reproduce certain "spiritual manifestations" described by Sir Hiram in the June number of the Strand Magazine. Mr. Maskelyne has accepted the challenge, and proposes that a contest shall be arranged between himself and any spirit medium Sir Hiram can produce. Mr. Maskelyne's reply to Sir Hiram will appear in the August number of the same magazine.

Miss Jessie Templeton has just finished the Syndicate halls, and will shortly open on the Barrasford tour with new songs and dresses. She will play principal boy, 1910-11, for Mr. E. Dottridge in his pantomime Cinderella.

Mr. S. W. Wyndham has been repeating his former successes this week at Sheffield, where he has undoubtedly been the laughter hit of the bill. His new song by Harry Carlton, entitled "My Sunday's joint of meat," has turned out the biggest success he has yet produced.

After three years continually touring in England the Achmed Ibrahim Troupe are taking a well-earned holiday round the Mediterranean. They sail from Southampton on Tuesday next, and will return in time to open at the Empire, Wolverhampton, on Aug. 1.

At the Pavilion, Rothesay, recently Mr. McGaw, late assistant-manager at the Glasgow Coliseum, who has gone to the popular Clyde resort to fill a similar position, was presented by the Coliseum staff and friends with a purse of sovereigns, a suit case, and a travelling rug.

Mr. Harry Levaine was initiated into the mysteries of the Terriers' order on Friday, the 17th. The ceremony was performed by Terrier Ted Karno, P.W.T., assisted by Terrier Ted E. Box, V.T. Terrier Arthur Were officiated as organist. Mr. Dan Robans was initiated into the mysteries of the Order on Sunday last. The ceremony was performed by Terrier Ted Karno, P.W.T., assisted by Terrier Fred A. Hooper, V.T., P.W.T. Terrier Arthur Were officiated as organist.

Messrs. F. H. Pedgrift (manager of The Era), Mr. Pedgrift, jun., Robert Barnes (Lecardo Bros.), and Fred Clair (Cash and Clair) have successfully passed the ballot as candidates for membership of the Terriers' Association.

The officers of the Terriers' Association for the month of July are as follow:—Terrier Fred A. Hooper, W.T.; Terrier Russell Brandow, V.T.; Terrier C. C. Cornish, W.I.; Terrier Arthur Were, organist. In future the officers for W.D. and Y.B. will be elected every Sunday evening, and will hold office for the evening only. After election upon four separate occasions they will be qualified to stand for the next higher position. The innovation of "Fraternity Time," suggested by the secretary, was a great success upon Sunday last. On and after Sunday, July 3, the Sunday meetings will commence at 7.30 p.m. sharp, and conclude at 10.15 p.m.

The annual river outing of the Terriers' Association takes place to-morrow (Sunday). An excellent programme of sports has been arranged by Terrier Ben Woodger, and some fine prizes have been given by Terriers Ted E. Box, F. Larola, S. N. Salter, and Syd Walker.

Six women suffragists caused some excitement at the Metropolitan on Monday by the manner in which they protested against the production of the comedy sketch entitled H.M.S. Perhaps, by the Six Brothers Luck. As soon as the number announcing the turn appeared a woman in the front row of the orchestra stalls rose and said: "I protest against the ridicule this sketch heaps on the heads of women, and suffragists in particular." The woman got no further, for Mr. Leslie Gooch, the manager, had her gently carried out of the building.

Another woman immediately arose to continue the address, and by nimbly vaulting over her stall eluded the attendants for a time, but was eventually caught and ejected. Four other women mounted seats in other parts of the front of the house, and they, too, were removed, struggling desperately. A grey-haired woman, who attempted unsuccessfully to get on to a seat in order to protest, was asked to leave, and after some argument she did so. The sketch, in which one of the cast appears as a suffragist, was performed without further interruption.

The annual sports of the Aldborough Tennis Club were held last Saturday in their own grounds at Seven Kings. The weather was perfect, and the spectators enjoyed the day immensely. In the evening a variety entertainment was given, and the following artists were very successful:—Kashima, the sensational juggler, who performed several astonishing tricks; Miss Florence Hyde, in most amusing sketches at the piano; and Mr. Fred Percy, who sang "I do like to be beside the seaside" and "Tax the bachelors." Mr. Will Goldston, the entertainment manager for A. W. Gamage, Ltd., provided the three artists mentioned.

Mr. Tom Dunville has been talking to Reynolds's of his coat, an old familiar stage friend for twenty-two years. He said:—"The garment started life as a black alpaca bodice, the property of my mother, who lived at Coventry. I was not rich enough to indulge in a professionally-provided theatrical wardrobe, so I became my own costumier. Even in its palmy days that black alpaca was cut somewhat on the Queen Elizabeth pattern, and to it I added a lower storey, a frill, and an upper storey in the shape of a white linen collar—out of respect for Milton! The high shoulders and the tight waist I left alone, and they are there now.

"That coat is my mascot, and I estimate that I have worn it something like 18,000 times. I should hate to lose it, but all the same I cannot honestly say that I take tremendous care of it. Folk could have stolen it—I mean, taken it by accident—hundreds of times, but I suppose they have been afraid of having it identified. On the other hand, perhaps everyone is honest, or possibly they realise the solid fact that the dear old jacket isn't worth a cent. Once in a fire I lost everything I possessed in the stage property line save this coat, and that escaped the theatre flames because I had taken it to my hotel for alterations and repairs. Oh, yes, I always darn it up and patch it myself. It is just a mass of man-made mendings; in fact, I have to search pretty diligently to discover a remnant of the original."

SONGS, WRITERS, AND SINGERS.

THE scenes at Messrs. Francis and Day's Charing Cross-road establishment on Saturday morning last, when the firm's twenty-ninth song annual and twenty-ninth dance album were issued to an expectant trade, nearly baffles and almost beggars description. The various houses who do the printing for the firm had for weeks prior been exhibiting to their hands the mystic words, "F. & D., 'Pull out,'" which to the initiated means much, and, reduced to ordinary language, stands for "Francis and Day job; take your shirts off to it." At the hour of nine a.m. all the great railway companies, and every one of the recognised carriers, whose names are household words, had their vans—many in Paris—in readiness, and in a short time the first twenty-five tons of printed matter had been dispersed. Offers of assistance had been made by business neighbours, and the use of additional space tendered, which latter was gratefully taken advantage of, and one of the first orders to be disposed of was a trifling item of 20,000 copies for Messrs. Paxton, of New Oxford-street.

SINCE Monday the orders have flowed in for copies in ever-increasing battalions, and the swiftest and most up-to-date creations of Hoe and Marinoni (who are the Worths and Peter Robinsons of printing engineering) have had their capacity for work put severely to the test. No better examples of what can be done for the ubiquitous shilling could be possibly dreamed of than these wonderful volumes, which enshrine between their covers thirty-eight of the best and brightest musical compositions of the day.

IN accord with the usual custom of the house, to-day (Saturday) will be devoted by Messrs. Francis and Day's staffs to jollity, and both the London establishments will be entirely closed for the ninth annual outing, which will take place at Batchworth Heath. Reserved saloons will be attached to the 10.5 a.m. from Marylebone station (Great Central), and the large party will detrain at Northwood, subsequently dining at Ye Olde Greene Manne Hotel. Mr. Charles Wilmott and Mr. William Eyke will occupy the chairs, and Mr. David Day will once again, as principal guest, make a June day look like it likes to look.

AT the Empire, Liverpool, Mr. G. H. Elliott, the chocolate-coloured coon, has been once again achieving stupendous success with his present masterpieces of song, "There's a little black Cupid in the moon," by Lester Barrett and Hermann E. Darewski, and "Mister Owl," by Alfred J. Lawrance. Both are published by Messrs. Francis and Day.

THE second edition of Miss Ada Reeve's humorous song, "And just then he fell out of bed," which Messrs. Francis and Day are preparing, will be embellished with a new portrait of the fair artist.

ALREADY the orders from Douglas and Blackpool for Miss Florrie Forde's great songs, "Flanagan," "'Tis a faded picture," and "Rip Van Winkle," are assuming August-like proportions, and edition after edition follow each other in rapid succession. Messrs. Francis and Day are the publishers of these sterling successes.

MR. WILL GODWIN, whose tremendous success, "If those lips could only speak," will be long remembered, has been congratulated on all hands on the receipt of the intelligence that the number promises in the United States to eclipse its great record as a seller throughout these islands. This is one of Messrs. Francis and Day's publications.

QUITE a number of artists have been under the impression that the popular numbers published by Messrs. Francis and Day under the titles of "The musical comedy girl" and "Rosie's young man" are free songs. But, like her latest successful item, "Miss Lollipop," they were specially written and composed for Miss Eileen Douglas by Fred W. Leigh and Henry E. Pether. Great inquiry is current for each and all of the songs among patrons of seaside entertainers. Messrs. Francis and Day are the publishers.

GEORGE ARTHURS, who is rusticating at present at his bungalow at Shoreham, has, with Fred W. Leigh, once more fitted Mr. George Lashwood with a new and characteristic song, entitled "I forgot the number of the house." It is quite on the cards that it will be issued shortly by Messrs. Francis and Day.

AT the Alhambra Theatre Miss Ethel Levey has had the entire house with her nightly assisting in the chorus of Messrs. Francis and Day's "Pride of the Prairie, Mary." Not since "The Soldiers of the Queen" was sung at this house has such a thing happened. Miss Levey's rendering of the new song of Messrs. Francis and Day, "Little Knickerbockers," leaves nothing to be desired.

"HOW NICK CARTER SOLVED THE MYSTERY OF THE LIVING DEAD."

New and Original Miniature Play, by Mr. W. J. Patemore, Produced on Monday, June 20, at the Bow Palace.

Sir Richard Harcourt ..... MR. LYN-OSCAR

Nick Carter ..... MR. BERNARD MERVYN

The name of Bernard Mervyn has for so long been a household word in the music hall world, and the popularity of his many enterprises is so indisputable that the success of a new production associated with his name is invariably looked upon as assured. It is therefore not at all surprising that the production of How Nick Carter Solved the Mystery of the Living Dead—a sketch full of real human interest—should score a decided success. Played by a strong company, it gains by a fine exhibition of all-round acting; but the acting is not alone responsible for its success, for due praise must be rendered to Mr. Frederic Baugh for his personal supervision of the production.

The story follows the usual detective tale replete with the accustomed mass of circumstantial evidence, but in this particular instance the author has managed to so skilfully arrange the dramatic material at his command as to form a series of most exciting and dramatic incidents. In addition, quite a feature is the love interest running throughout. As Stephen Hall, the adventurer, whom Nick Carter eventually runs to earth, Mr. Horace Denton must be commended for some fine "heavy" work. Miss Mabel Mannering, late of the Lyceum Theatre, confirmed the reputation for artistic versatility which she has made in London by a dramatic yet pretty portrayal of the rôle of Miriam Gray. Mr. Bernard Mervyn played with his accustomed strength and composure, and had a part in Nick Carter for which he is suited as well as anything in his repertory. The remaining rôles were adequately filled.

MANAGERS and artists should note that Messrs. Ted Rawes and Arthur Clarance have now started a variety agency in Newcastle, and by doing so are supplying a long-felt want in such a large centre as Newcastle. Northern managers requiring first-class acts should communicate with Messrs. Rawes and Clarance. The latter gentleman is the son of Mr. Lloyd Clarance, well known in the profession. Mr. Ted Rawes is son of Mr. T. C. Rawes, proprietor of the Palace, Durham, and the Victoria, West Stanley.

LONDON VARIETY THEATRES.

THE CANTERBURY.

"THE ALTAR OF DUTY."

The Doctor ..... MR. MONTE BAYLY
The Valet ..... MR. E. W. RICHARDS
The Woman ..... MISS DIANA HOPE

This proves to be a touching little dramatic episode of every-day life. The Valet informs us that Jack, his master, has met with a severe motor accident, and is lying in an inner room awaiting the arrival of a doctor. Now the doctor, who eventually arrives, is a man who has devoted his life to his profession and scientific research; consequently, he has lost the affection of his wife, whom, truth to tell, he has very much neglected. She, it seems, has transferred her affections to Jack, the very man who has met with the accident. When the doctor sees his patient he instructs the valet to ring up a specialist, for an operation is inevitable to save the young fellow's life. But the Woman gets to hear of the accident to her lover, and when she arrives to comfort the injured man the room is in darkness. "Oh, Jack," she cries, "where are you?" there is a sudden stream of light in the room, and, to her dismay, the doctor—her husband—confronts her. She gasps, "You!" "Yes," he answers, "Me." Cornered, the Woman reproaches her husband with his neglect, and they get to talk of their child. Whilst they are doing so, the specialist rings up to say that it is impossible for him to come to perform the operation. And thus the question of the patient's life rests with the man whose wife has practically been unfaithful to him. The doctor argues that if he does not operate the man will die. So he accepts the responsibility, and performs the operation, and it is likely that Jack will recover. Afterwards husband and wife have a common-sense talk. He points out to the Woman how much their child wants a mother, and he says that if she will come back to him he will give up all his scientific research and he will devote the autumn of his life to making his wife and child happy. The little sketch is a good one, and sympathetically acted by the trio concerned.

Mr. Fred Kitchen as Private Potts is in excellent form this week, and his gagging is greatly relished by South-siders; Harry Brown is doing extremely well, too; Stewart and Morgan and Charles Santon are two extremely clever and successful acts; the Knockabout Burnells and Lottie Lennox are great favourites with Canterbury audiences. Rose Hamilton, Rose Elliott, Ruby Emmerson, Bonnie Lexia, and Marie Pera collectively would be a bevy of beauty and talent; individually, their work is excellent, and well received.

WOOLWICH HIPPODROME.

This week the proprietors have secured a really first-class bill, no less than three stars of the first magnitude being booked. Phil Ray, in his latest spasms and in his own particular style of abbreviating, is more than funny; and J. W. Rickaby, the popular burlesque comedian, has some new songs with catchy refrains, and takes well.

Arnold Bell has brought a new and interesting dramatic episode entitled The Summing Up, cleverly written by Hans P. Gore. The story is a love affair of a judge who is rather more familiar than the dignity of his office necessitates. The woman whom he betrays and afterwards scorns is left to the tender mercies of the world. She marries, however, but her husband falls on evil ground, and is to be tried at the Central Criminal Court. The wife the day prior to the trial interviews the judge, and pleads for her husband and child. The judge offers a renewal of the intrigue as the price of the acquittal, a proposition which the woman scorns. She makes a last passionate appeal to the judge, stating that she and her husband are more sinned against than sinning. The judge in his summing-up allows his better self to surmount his evil desires, and the curtain falls on his promise to dismiss the case. As the judge Mr. Arnold Bell is very forceful, and rises to the occasion; the Woman, as enacted by Miss Frances Campbell, is sympathetic and emotional; and the secretary husband is well portrayed by Mr. F. C. Robson.

The Brothers Brooks are sprightly comedy entertainers, their work is clean and crisp without vulgarity; Madge Allan is a chic comedienne and clever eccentric dancer; Percy Hannan is the possessor of a fine baritone voice, and uses it to the best advantage; Maggie Carr is a fine instrumental comedienne, her banjo playing and dancing being of the best; Francis and Alfred are good jugglers and jesters; the Spanish Goldini Troupe are distinctly clever with their carpet spinning, and their acrobatic feats are quite of the best on the road. The Bioscope is showing a new series of pictures, and takes well.

CAMDEN HIPPODROME.

Mr. Wentworth Croke's new tabloid version of East Lynne fills the chief place in the bill here this week. We noticed it at length in our columns last week, and now it has quite settled down into a big success. It is a capital version of this ever-green story, and holds its audience firmly. Miss Beth Elliott plays Lady Isabel in a convincing and dramatic manner; while Mr. Leonard Yorke's rendering of Archibald Carlyle is in every way praiseworthy. The assumption of Sir Francis Levison by Mr. George R. Montford is a fine piece of work, drawing with a firm hand the character intended to be portrayed; Miss Muriel Marsden is a very sweet Barbara Hare; and Miss Madge Leverton makes a capital Cornelia Carlyle. Miss Winnie Rouseby, a clever little actress, is very sweet as Willie Carlyle. The scenic production is particularly fine, and the various sets are realistic in every detail, the Drawing-room scene being most effective. Mr. Wentworth Croke is to be heartily congratulated on the success of his latest venture.

Joe O'Gorman is as full of racy stories of his old friend Flanagan as ever, and he keeps all in continual good humour with his various yarns, while his songs are always agreeable, and the dance he winds up with pleasing. Miss Daisy James is full of boundless merriment and vivacity, and scores heavily with a couple of ditties, "Ship, ahoy!" being the most popular. Miss James's dresses are very smart, and her turn is much appreciated. Miss Ethel Stephenson, an accomplished musician with a rich contralto voice, in her rendering of Tosti's "Good-bye" to her own accompaniment proves a delight. Miss Ray Ford, a bright comedienne, has a taking number in "Won't you be my Ching-a-ling?" and also contributes a neat dance.

Goggin and Davis, a couple of grotesque knockabouts, do some clever tumbling and funny acrobatic feats; George Campbell amuses his audience with his songs; and the Kennedy Girls are a bevy of most energetic young ladies, who sing, dance, and give a display of ju-jitsu. In the latter Miss Lily Russell, who is a champion at the art, displays her skill, and great enthusiasm is aroused. Though last on the bill, Curtis Leo keeps the audience interested by reason of his clever and lightning conjuring feats. He performs a great number of tricks at full speed and with wonderful preciseness. The Bioscope, with new films, concludes the bill. Mr. Albert H. Adams, who has made himself so popular here, is leaving, and we wish him every success in his new sphere of activity.

CROUCH END HIPPODROME.

Rarely have we met with a more completely attractive and agreeable programme than that which has this week been presented at this popular house. It is no mere form of speech to say that there is not a weak turn in the company or any suspicion of "padding" in making up the two and a half hours' entertainment, given twice nightly under the admirable management of Mr. Fredk. Phelps. A strong attraction is provided in Fred Karno's successful travesty on the modern music hall, Mumming Birds, into which are introduced new turns, while the cheeky boy and the drunken visitor in the boxes are still retained. Miss Gracie Gallimore sings with much success "Up among the mountains" and exhibits much skill in her concluding dance. The Maxims contribute a smart juggling and balancing entertainment; and Will Smythe, a coloured artist, sings "Home," and shows considerable ability as a buck dancer.

One of the best comedy sketches, entitled Father's Footsteps, presented by the Heriot Trio, appeals most successfully to the "Hippo." audiences; Montague Biggs tickles the house immensely as a female impersonator, the "make-up" and dressing being effective; and a hearty welcome is accorded to Dan Smart, an eccentric comedian, for his two songs, "It's enough to make a man's mouth water" and "I stopped there." Mimics, if their subjects are popular and their impersonations are at all faithful, are always sure of a welcome, and Lilian French's portraits of Vesta Tilley, Gertie Gitana, and others are wonderfully like the originals. Miss French also secures warm approval for her rendering of "When the summer sun is dying." The clever speciality act of Dent and Harris is another prominent feature of the programme, and Phil and Nettie Peters, Dutch-American artists, indulge in some funny business to the great delight of the house. Millie Doris, in the guise of a servant-maid, proves herself a born comedy artist, and sings with success "In my new place." The Whitworth Trio are trick cyclists of the best quality the complications of expertness in which they indulge being extraordinary. The Bioscope with a series of up-to-date and interesting pictures completes a capital programme.

ILFORD HIPPODROME.

The management of the above hall is having a special drama week, and has engaged Fredk. Melville's entire original London production, company and effects in the remarkable drama The Bad Girl of the Family. The company includes Miss Violet Crossley, whose portrayal of Bess Moore, the "bad girl," is most convincing. As Lieut. Richard Marsh Mr. Henry Hargreaves's rendering of the heroic rôle is very painstaking; Mr. Walter Thornton as Harry Gordon invests the character with all the necessary duplicity; Lord Erskine is admirably played by Mr. Fredk. W. Freeman; as Barney Gordon Mr. Walter Pemberton is decidedly amusing; and Mr. George Bellmore is well suited to the character of Jerry Holmes. The part of Honor Moore (Bess's sister) is deputed to Miss Catherine Carew, who cleverly plays a difficult rôle; and as Gladys Erskine Miss Daisie Cooke gives a sweetly sympathetic rendering. The play is effectively staged.

"CHANTECLAIR;

A Feathered Fantasy in Three Fits, Adapted from the production at the Ronacher Theatre, Vienna, Book by Joe Peterman, Music by Frank Leedam, Produced at the Oxford Music Hall on Monday, June 20.

Chanteclair ..... MR. EUSTACE BURNABY
Mother Goose ..... MR. LEONARD RUSSELL
The Fox ..... MR. IVAN BERLYN
The Cat ..... MR. JAMES LEARMOUTH
The Boosey Rooster ..... MR. ERNEST SEFTON
The Dog ..... MR. CHARLES ANSON
The Bantam ..... MR. WALTER BRODIN
The Magpie ..... MR. JOE PETERMAN
Elsa ..... MISS DORA LANGHAM
Hen Pheasant ..... MISS MADOLINE REES

The production of a good-natured travesty of Edmond Rostand's play Chantecler was first conceived at Vienna, and the ambitious sketch, entitled Chanteclair; or, Hi Cock-a-lor-um, produced at the Oxford on Monday, is avowedly a shortened version of that burlesque, which has been given in New York under the title of the Barnyard Romeo. Of the book not much can be said, simply because the dialogue is cut to the narrowest limits to give the necessary time for the musical numbers, which are invariably bright, tuneful, and inspiriting. But it is the mounting and dressing [illegible] Chanteclair its chief importance. [illegible] is filled with roosters, hen pheasants, guinea fowl, ducks, turkeys, and other wild and tame fowl, all costumed by Clarkson, who realises exactly the strength of the proverb: "Fine feathers make fine birds." The plumage of each feathered tribe has been wonderfully reproduced, and if genius be the art of taking infinite pains, then our Willie, of Wardour-street, for a certainty, may be said to possess it. The plot may be briefly sketched: Chanteclair falls in love with Nellie, the beautiful hen pheasant, but is rebuffed by Mother Goose, the hen's foster-mother, who ties her up in a cage and leaves her there for the night. Rescued by a mouse, Nellie is abducted later by the fox, to be rescued in the second scene by the faithful dog. In the third scene Chanteclair and the hen pheasant are married and all ends well, Mother Goose relenting before the final crow of the gallinaceous hero, who makes a somewhat inconstant sun rise.

In the title-rôle Mr. Eustace Burnaby strutted in the poultry run, just like the uxorious king of the farmyard, and sang the music allotted to him with much heartiness. An undoubted success is scored by Mr. Leonard Russell, another capital singer, as Mother Goose, who, if we mistake not, sings a prologue like the clown in I Pagliacci; and that capital character-actor, Mr. Ivan Berlyn, makes the most of his slender chances as the Fox. Mr. Ernest Sefton's continually repeated gag, "Come and have one," becomes rather tiresome, and his boozy rooster is scarcely effective; but Miss Madoline Rees is quite a sweet "chick" as the Hen Pheasant. The Magpie is made to comment on the politics of the day, a dragged-in reference to Lloyd George securing a hearty cheer. Chanteclair is not wildly funny, but the music is worth hearing, and the dresses should be the talk of London. Messrs. Reginald Cooper and Francis Bull and Co. are responsible for the scenery, and the three fine sets include A Poultry Run, The Home of the Fox, and Another Part of the Poultry Run. A more elaborate production has not been seen on the variety stage; and Mr. Blyth Pratt is to be congratulated on its completeness. Mr. Leon Bassett's orchestra play the music uncommonly well. The play has been produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Joe Peterman, who is running the company with Mr. George Ricketts.

THE EUSTON.

Rarely neat is the acrobatic show known as A Dream in An Opium Den, that has drawn the enthusiasm of patrons of the Euston during the week; and it must come as a novelty to old music hall frequenters to discover so much that is clever, agile, finished in technique, combined with a wonderful ensemble in working, as well as an occasional unobtrusive quaintness. The troupe has taken the title of the Six Ceylons, and consists of one lady and five lithe and graceful men. The scene is an opium den, of which the fair one is the presiding genius. All are dressed as Chinese, and the feats of the "crowd" are accomplished under the grimacing of a mechanical head. The tumbling throughout is delightful to watch, especially the table work. We are given to understand that this clever combination is already booked far ahead.

The humour of the programme is mostly contributed by Mr. Harry Tate, in his latest skit Flying. The "veri-ot-Tater-plane" is a fearful and wonderful thing; and the "flighty" engineer, who makes jokes about Farman, the interviewer, the corpulent mayor, with the irrepressible brass band, are all factors in the scheme of fun. Mr. Tate, whose costume is a cross between that of a diver and an Arctic explorer, talks in an airy way of spending a few thousands on the machine, and the aerial journeys contemplated by the "irregular flier" include little week-end jaunts to Ceylon and back to Chicago. The skit has worked up into a success, which is still growing.

Mr. Fred Russell's elaborate scene for his ventriloquial act, with its clever mechanical figures, fills the stage. Coster Joe now changes his costume behind a screen, and the parrot joins him in a cigarette which he lights. The whole show is droll in the extreme, the popular polythonist getting a big reception. Miss Ethel Loftus puts a good dash of low comedy into her rendering of "What about poor old father?" and certainly makes a hit. The sentiment of Miss Marie Blythe's song is exactly to the liking of her hearers, who take up the chorus with considerable heartiness. The twenty dainty little girls, who are gathered together as Haley's Juveniles, belong mostly to the ancient race, and one of them—quite a little mite—shows immense precocity in her dance. An older girl sings with decided charm; and the whole working of the show, with its effective stage groupings and business, reflects a deal of credit on its organiser, King and Benson, in a pot-pourri of song and nonsense, incidentally burlesque drama, but they have the ability to offer something better than the present show. Mr. Harry Bedford wins his greatest success in his quaint final dance; Mr. Ian Colquhoun, who opens with an Irish character impersonation, is responsible for a capital rendering of "Il balen" from Trovatore; and Miss Dolly Denton opens the bill. Mr. Victor Opferman's orchestra is heard to advantage, both as vocalists and instrumentalists, in the opening descriptive selection, "A Sailor's Life." A favourite item in the bills presented, under the direction of Mr. Fred M'Avoy, is Ruffell's Bioscope, always interesting, instructive, and up to date.

BEFORE Mr. Registrar Brougham on Tuesday the public examination was held of Arthur Bond Sayers, who stated that he was a musician, and held an appointment as musical director at the London Pavilion. He had been engaged in that capacity for eight years at a salary of £6 per week. He attributed his insolvency to his inability to recover £1,300 lent by him to a lady, also to extravagance and to losses by betting on the turf. The debtor said he thought that he had lost £400 or £500 a year by betting on the turf and an additional £50 by card-playing. In January last he found he had got to the end of his resources, and had recourse to money-lenders. The examination was concluded, the accounts showing unsecured debts £675 17s. 4d. and assets consisting of a doubtful book-debt £1,300, estimated to realise £500.

SONGS, WRITERS, AND SINGERS.

Ever since Feldman's fifteenth song annual and fifteenth dance album were launched music dealers from all parts have been responsible for laudatory letters innumerable addressed to the Arthur-street house, accompanied in many instances by huge "repeat" orders. Considering that the first-mentioned volume contains, in addition to some thirty-five other popular "winners," such songs as "Somewhere," "I do like to be beside the seaside," "Oh, I must go home to-night," "I am longing for someone to love me," "Playing the game in the West," "Molly O'Morgan," "The pretty little girl from nowhere," and "It's the Alpine dress you're wearing," this happy state of affairs is little to be wondered at.

Messrs. B. Feldman and Co. are the happy possessors of "Beautiful garden of roses," by Dempsey and Schmidt, which Mr. Arthur Aldridge, Miss Bessie Slaughter, and other artists of light and leading have done so much to make popular, and "All in a day," by John P. Harrington and William Hargreaves, which Mr. Arthur Aldridge will specially produce at the London Pavilion on Monday week. Mr. Charles King, of King and Benson, will also feature "All in a day" at the Syndicate halls and throughout the Stoll tour in the new act which he is on the eve of producing.

Dainty Miss Kittee Rayburn when she opens at the Palace, Shaftesbury-avenue, shortly, will make a special feature there of Mellor, Lawrance, and Gifford's delightful romance of the Seine, "Marie Louise," with which Miss Venie Clements was so successful at the Tivoli and other houses. This French "washing-tub" song, as it has been not inaptly designated by a professional wag, is a Feldman publication that should certainly go far in the near future.

Mr. George Lashwood is winning a most unequivocal success all along the line with "Mister Pat O'Hare," by Benjamin Hapgood Burt, which Messrs. Feldman and Co. publish. The genial George will also shortly produce a new song from the same pen (assisted by John P. Harrington, who has written special new Lashwoodian verses), entitled "Sing, Kate, sing!" which the go-ahead Arthur-street firm also publish.

Many inquiries are being daily made at Feldman and Co.'s establishment anent Chas. K. Harris's "Nobody knows—nobody cares," which, as rendered all round the Stoll tour by Miss Ada Reeve, has been a sheer delight.

Haley's "Garden of Girls" company continue to make Messrs. Harrington, Rogers, and Neat's delightful little pastoral romance "My sweet garden queen" the absolute bonne bouche of their artistic entertainment. This number, which is being extensively featured at the seaside and elsewhere, should appeal to singers of piquant and refined numbers.

"Oh, boys, I've seen you there!" by John P. Harrington and John Neat, is a Feldman publication with a rollicking and merry chorus, and is eminently suited to lady artists who are "gingery" in their methods.

The Anglo-Japs, a select party of entertainers, at present appearing at Cardow's Garden, Folkestone, are featuring the following Feldman numbers daily with prodigious success:—"Beautiful garden of roses," "Come over the garden wall," "You were coming through the corn, Molly dear," "Marie Louise," "Dear little sunbonnet lady," "Pretty little girl from nowhere," and "It's the Alpine dress you're wearing."

At Weymouth, Tom Carrick's Elite Entertainers are featuring Feldman publications. Notable successes sung by members of this troupe are—"Georgie took me walking in the park" and "Longing for someone to love me," sung by Miss Beatrice Moore, and "Somewhere" and "Beautiful garden of roses," sung by Miss Jennie Mackay.

Miss Ethel Beech, who has been making a phenomenal success at the Holborn Empire this week with "Marie Louise," by Mellor, Lawrance, and Gifford, will next week specially produce Harrington, Rogers, and Neat's delightful song "My sweet garden queen" at all her engagements. Both of these are Feldman publications.

Messrs. John P. Harrington, E. W. Rogers, and Orlando Powell have collaborated in writing two new numbers for Miss Hetty King, entitled "The West Pole" and "I'm afraid you'll have to come along o' me," which good judges predict will be two of the biggest successes ever sung by this versatile little lady. The same trio of writers have been specially commissioned to supply no less than a round half-dozen other songs for Miss King.

Dainty Miss Daisy Dormer is undoubtedly the hit of the Holborn Empire bill this week, what time she merrily chortles Harrington, Collins, and Trevor's catchy new coon number "You'll have to go, Mr. Snow." In this number Miss Dormer has undoubtedly found the biggest winner she has had for many a long day.

Miss Daisy James at the Syndicate halls, Miss Maud Esmond on the Gibbons tour, Miss May Mars and Miss Nina Wood on the Stoll tour, and Miss Josephine Crook on the Macnaghten tour are each making a huge hit with A. J. Mills and Bennett Scott's popular song "Ship ahoy! or, All the nice girls love a sailor." Needless to say, alfresco artists on every coast of the United Kingdom are featuring this "bright and breezy" ditty at all performances. The Star Music Co. who publish the number are having a record demand for copies.

Miss Ella Retford has secured from Messrs. A. J. Mills and Bennett Scott the prior rights of a new song with an irresistibly catchy chorus, "I met little Mary Ellen at Th' Isle of Man." This popular lady is featuring this item at all her engagements, and is creating quite a sensational success with it. The Star Music Co. anticipate great things for this number.

Another song that people are beginning to "talk about" is a really charming chorus ballad, "I wonder if you care." In this song A. J. Mills, the well-known lyric writer, has excelled all his previous efforts, and has not forgotten the essential "strong last line." It is sufficient to say that Mr. Bennett Scott's music is worthy of the words. It and the song has proved an instantaneous success wherever sung. The Star Music Co. wish to inform artists that these are not free songs, and written permission must be obtained.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.

Harry Leslie's Gay Lieutenants, a company of costume comedy entertainers, made their appearance on Monday evening and during the week, and fully justified the very marked applause which awaited their efforts in song, dance, sketch, or burlesque. The two ladies, Cecily O'Shea and Nan Taylor, possess vocal ability of no mean order, and Messrs. Alex. Rubinoff, Fred Shepherd, Jack Harris, and Arthur Holland in their respective lines performed meritoriously. In comedy we had the irresistible Griff Hodson, whose style brought back reminiscences of a famous Ethiopian comedian.

"THE BOTTOM DOG."

Sketch, by Arthur Shirley, Produced at the Peckham Hippodrome on Monday, June 20.

Rev. Arthur Carruthers ..Mr. Robert Gilbert
Sergeant Stubbs .....Mr. George Goodwin
Policeman .....Mr. Jack Williams
Bill Baxter .....Mr. Henry Bedford

This is an effective and pathetic playlet, lasting about twenty minutes, and, like the work of Robert Blatchford of the same name, it constitutes a piece of special pleading for that unfortunate outcast of our latter-day civilisation, The Bottom Dog. The sketch presents a variant of the well-known episode of the Bishop and the convict from Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables."

Bill Baxter is an ex-convict, who has been the day previous discharged from Portland, after completing his sentence of seven years. He is a wretched-looking tramp, and a kindly white-haired old vicar, the Rev. Arthur Carruthers, rescues him from the unpleasant attentions of the unfriendly villagers, and learning the sore straits he is in, invites the astonished man to supper, and afterwards to sleep at the Vicarage. Baxter is overwhelmed by the unlooked-for kindness; but when the clergyman is asleep by the fire his old evil nature returns, and after a short, sharp struggle with his better self, he forces open the glass door of a cabinet with his knife, and purloins a portion of the vicar's silver, subsequently escaping by the window. Carruthers then awakes to find the thief escaped with his plunder. He, however, is soon brought back in the custody of two policemen, and confronted with the man he has robbed. But the kindly vicar has resolved to save Baxter, and accordingly he tells the astonished officers of the law that the stolen silver was his gift to the outcast. When the police are gone, Baxter completely overcome by the clergyman's generosity, exclaims "Forgive me! I never had a chance!" "Your chance has come at last," says Carruthers. "Will you take it?" "Will I take it? By God, I will!" cries "the Bottom Dog," as the curtain falls.

The sketch which, by the way, is enhanced by a very pretty set scene of the interior of a country vicarage, was received with the utmost enthusiasm. That experienced actor, Mr. Henry Bedford, made a splendidly virile character-study of the outcast, Bill Baxter, being alike forcible and pathetic by turns. An admirable foil to his more declamatory methods was afforded by Mr. Robert Gilbert, in his suave rendering of the kindly vicar, Arthur Carruthers. Mr. George Goodwin was a smart Sergeant Stubbs; and Mr. Jack Williams did all that was required as the Policeman. The Bottom Dog should have a long and prosperous career at the halls.

The Hawkhill Picture Palace, Dundee, is to be let. It is a very comfortable hall, licensed for cinematograph, seats over one thousand, with back and side galleries; has a beautiful stage, complete with footlights, piano, fireproof box, and resistance. Offers should be sent to David Blackadder, 32, Castle-street, Dundee.

"THE IRON KING."

Sir James Rawsthorne ....Mr. John Sargent.
Charles .....Mr. Conrad E. Stratford.
Wilson .....Mr. Ulick Burke.
M. D'Espion .....Mr. Charles Vivian.
Bill .....Mr. Leonard Aardale.
Mary .....Miss Winnifred Acton.
Kitty .....Miss Jessie Yatman.

The capable stock company of the Theatre Metropole produced on Monday a concise and pithy little dramalette bearing the title of The Iron King as a curtain-raiser to East Lynne. The author is a local county councillor, and his little work deals with the much-discussed topic of Capital and Labour, and incidentally a plot to cripple England's Naval Supremacy. Sir James Rawsthorne, who bears the soubriquet of the Iron King, is the proprietor of an extensive iron and steel works, and has in hand an urgent order for armour plates for ships of war. Wilson, the manager of the works, is in the pay of a foreign Power, and turns out the plates in so defective a condition that they must be rejected by the Admiralty. Wilson endeavours to poison the mind of the Iron King against his nephew, who occupies the position of under-manager, asserting that he is breeding strife and discontent among the workmen. Fearful that the contracts will not be completed in time, Sir James casts off his nephew, who, however, defeats a plot to destroy the works originated by Wilson, with the result that the scoundrel's true character is laid bare. The performance, which was under the patronage of the Mayor and Mayoress and several local dignitaries, was quite successful.

"BILL'S BROTHER."

A Musical Trifle, Produced at the Bedford on Monday, June 20.

Bill .....Mr. Alexander Loftus
Bertie .....Mr. Charles Addison
Bonsor .....Mr. E. W. Chewd
Mabel Carr .....Miss Muriel Mascot
Grace Joy .....Miss Madge Prior

This little musical play, which Mr. Alexander Loftus produced on Monday, had a most successful send-off. It takes us back to the ever-popular New Barmaid musical comedy, and the scene is that of the Pussy Cats' Club, where the members certainly don some most enticing costumes. Bill's brother Bertie is the head waiter, while Bill, who has been more successful in life, is a new member, and learning that a new barmaid is expected he plays a joke on the members by impersonating the eagerly-looked-for lady, and the results are extremely diverting. Mr. Loftus is a host in himself as Bill, playing with much humour, and his scene when he takes over command of the refreshment department is decidedly comic. Much help is also given to the laughter-raising by Mr. Charles Addison, who is in fine form as Bertie, and he scores heavily with his clever dialect song. The other parts are well sustained, and there is also a chorus of charming ladies. The scenic part of the production is elaborate.

"AN AMATEUR ANARCHIST."

A Comedy Playlet by George Arthurs, Produced at the Empire Palace Theatre, Edinburgh, on Monday, June 20.

Olga Petrovitch .....Miss Lillian Roseberry
The Count .....Mr. Leo Minster
Adam Armstrong .....Mr. Carter Livesey

It must at once be said that Mr. Arthurs has added another successful play to the many excellent pieces which are being presented on the music hall stage. There is humour in the dialogue, and the plot contains an exciting situation which compels the attention of the audience. The scene is laid in the flat of Olga Petrovitch, at Richmond, where she and her fellow conspirator are awaiting the arrival of a dangerous bomb with which they intend to deal a blow at the British House of Commons. Adam Armstrong, a supposed servant in the employ of the Lightning Express Company enters with a box, for the safe delivery of which he asks the Nihilist's signature. She resolves, however, to win the apparently simple Yorkshireman to her base uses, and by alternate cajolery and threats she seems to have gained her point. Locking the doors of her room, and shutting out the only means of escape—for the river runs beneath the window—she bids Armstrong open the box to obtain the bomb. The Yorkshireman, having obeyed her command, turns the tables on the two plotters, and vows that he will dash the bomb upon the ground unless the doors are opened. The Nihilists, in fear of their lives, obey. Armstrong throws the deadly explosive into the river, whistles to two constables, who enter the apartment, and discloses himself as Detective Armstrong, of Scotland Yard, as the curtain falls.

The little play is admirably acted. Miss Lilian Roseberry's prepossessing appearance, and undoubted dramatic power, make her an ideal representative of the fascinating and dangerous Russian. Her scene with Armstrong was cleverly done, and the varying expressions of tenderness and passion were splendidly enacted. Mr. Carter Livesey's impersonation of the messenger was characterised by humour and power. The theatre rang with laughter at his droll sayings as the Yorkshireman. The dialect was perfect, and the dénouement was powerfully played. Mr. Leo Minster had little to do as the Count, but did that little adequately.

Mr. W. F. Frame does not pretend to be a rival of Mother Shipton as a prophet, though he "pictures" the possibilities of the future. He writes:—"This is the twentieth century—in the twenty-second century we are likely to see a lot of things we don't see now. In that century there shall be airships, steamships, but no hardships; everything shall go faster, except a woman's tongue (it can't). You will be able to go to bed in Europe, rise next morning and get to New York by 8 o'clock, either morning, noon, or night. By airship you will be able to cross from London to Calcutta without either catching a cold or a collection, sampling Madras, Bombay, and the snowy-cladded peaks of the Himalayas on the way."

JAP PLAYERS AT THE COLISEUM.

"THE TEA-HOUSE,"
A Japanese Drama, Produced on Monday, June 20, at the Coliseum.

Murasaki .....Mme. Hanako
Otyo .....Miss Massa
Tosa .....Mr. Murakara
Dampe .....Mr. Sakati

Writing in the first year of the century, Mr. Osman Edwards says of the Japanese theatre:—"Certain improvements in histrionic and scenic matters have been introduced, but no development in construction and character-drawing, as we understand those terms, no change in the peculiar ethical and feudal teachings of the Yedo period has supervened. Enter a Tokyo theatre to-day and you will find yourself in Old Japan. . . . I find an exquisite instance of Japanese subtlety, however, in the mingled devotion and ferocity of their popular plays. The heroine is either a geisha or a courtesan, exposed by her profession to the worst caprice of passion or of fortune." Such, indeed, is Murasaki, a geisha, presented to Coliseum audiences on Monday for the first time by the incomparable Japanese actress Mme. Hanako, who thrilled Hippodrome audiences a couple of years ago in the petite tragedy Otake. This geisha has discovered an intrigue between Dampe, her lover, and Otyo, her servant; but the rising storm of jealousy is arrested by the suave explanations and assurances of unalterable affection on the part of Dampe. The arrival of Tosa, a rich Samurai, who wishes to see Murasaki, sets matters going in another groove. After the man of money and influence has taken tea with Murasaki and Dampe, he asks for a dance from the geisha, who fascinates him by her art and grace. He is reckless in his reward, and the sight of gold arouses the cupidity of the girl, who makes up her mind to rob him. When alone with Tosa she drugs his tea with a potion, and he is in a state of collapse, when Otyo administers an antidote, and Tosa recovers, to discover that he has been robbed. Going off in search of Murasaki, that lady enters, and, discovering that Tosa has not been killed, she becomes enraged, and rushes upon the servant and throws her on the bed, intending to kill her. Tosa enters bent on vengeance, and, mistaking the figure on the bed for Murasaki, he kills the servant. Just then Dampe returns and attempts to fight Tosa, but is overpowered and killed. At this moment Murasaki appears. Horrified at seeing Dampe and Otyo both dead, she attempts to escape, but is seized and strangled by Tosa.

Mme. Hanako as Murasaki has a part in which she can be both tragic and serious, and in her pretty Japanes way she is most fascinating in the lighter scenes, and the terror exhibited at the prospect of Murasaki's certain death is very genuine. The dance, too, has a dainty grace and charm eminently languorous and Oriental. Mr. Murakara is terribly in earnest in his murderous (stage) work, and the complete self-satisfaction exhibited as each homicide is committed is somewhat curious. Mr. Sakati and Miss Massa, as Dampe and Otyo, contribute to the success achieved.

Miss Cecilia Loftus, on her return after a short indisposition, is reviving her successful impersonation of Miss Gertie Millar in the Moon Song from Our Miss Gibbs and the imitation of Mme. Clara Butt in the singing of Liddle's setting of John Keble's hymn "Abide with me"—an admirable vocal effort, which gains immensely by its contrast with the light-hearted delivery of "Sue" as given by Miss Ada Reeve, or "The keys of heaven" as sung by Yvette Guilbert. No one has such a comprehensive range of imitations as Miss Loftus. Another interesting turn in the Coliseum bill is Torbay, the silhouettist, who, in his comedy scenes on the white screen, can even put expression into the eyes—a veritable tour de force in hand-shadows with which one is not familiar. Humpsti and Bumsti (Pipifax and Panlo) are among the drollest of clown acrobats; and the famous Russian dancers are still popular contributors to the bill directed by Mr. Dundas Slater.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Mr. Morton Stephenson's Prelude to Act. II. from St. Ursula's Pilgrimage, MS., came first in the orchestral concert given by the students of the Royal Academy at Queen's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. If Mr. Stephenson is somewhat indebted to the great composer of Tannhäuser for inspiration in his Prelude he certainly displays no small amount of skill in composition, and the orchestra, under Sir A. C. Mackenzie, gave an excellent account of the new work. The second novelty on Tuesday afternoon was "Dawn in Fairyland" (MS.) for Soli Female Chorus and Orchestra, by S. Hartley Braithwaite, student. The First and Second Fairies sing short solos alternately of no special interest, and the composition winds up with a general chorus, by far the most attractive feature in the "Dawn in Fairyland." The composer, who writes cleverly for the orchestra, was called on, and warmly applauded. Miss Gertrude Walton and Miss Lilian G. Rickard were the soloists. Miss Edythe Goodman sang the scena "Joan of Arc's farewell" (Tschaikowsky) in German with a fair amount of success, and Mr. S. Wilson-Thornton displayed artistic refinement and a pleasing but not powerful voice in "Lohengrin's Farewell," a somewhat ambitious task. In her piano solo of César Franck's Symphonic Poem "Les Djinns," Miss May Matthews proved herself an able executant, and Miss Evelyn Dawkin received well-deserved applause for her brilliant rendering of Allegro Scherzando Presto, from Saint-Saëns's Second Pianoforte Concerto in G Minor. Vieuxtemps' Fantasia Appassionata for Violin was cleverly played by Miss Elsie E. Spencer, and a charming performance was given of Saint-Saëns's dainty Tarentelle for Flute and Clarinet, by Miss Edith Penville and Mr. Edward J. Augarde, two very talented students of the Royal Academy. The duet "How sweet the moonlight" (Kenilworth), Sullivan, was well sung by Miss Phœbe Cooke and Mr. F. Ernest Osborne, the latter having a pleasing and well-trained voice. Another clever student was Mr. Benno Pitt, who was set down for Max Bruch's 'cello solo "Canzone." The orchestra, under Sir Alexander Mackenzie, gave valuable support in the various instrumental and vocal items, and concluded the programme with a performance of the Gipsy Scene from Capriccio Espagnol, by Rimsky-Korsakow.

A SICK SONG-WRITER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—May I plead the cause of Mr. Chas. Hilbury, a well-known music hall song writer, and associated with many modern successes, amongst them being Miss Vesta Tilley's "Sidney's Holidays are in September," Bella and Bijou's popular "Suffragette" sketch, Miss Minnie Payne's Directoire song, and many others?

He has been seriously ill for some time, and has his mother to support, in which duty he has been very much handicapped by the recent necessity for an operation performed in the Charing Cross Hospital, from which he was discharged only three weeks since.

Having regard to his weak state of health, and the anxiety of domestic matters, it is decided to make an appeal to the many artists who have enjoyed successes from his pen, and to this end a large number of lists have been sent out by the hon. sec. and treasurer of the fund—Mr. Fred Murray—to which a generous and ready response will be welcome.

Mr. Murray's address is 48, Offley-road, Brixton, and he will be only too happy to acknowledge any assistance to the case.—Yours faithfully,

CHARLES WILMOTT.

Walter Stanton on Rinking.

MR. WALTER STANTON, the British Amateur Champion of roller skating has been giving his opinions on some phases of the pastime. He says: "Much has been written forecasting the early downfall of roller skating, and decrying the game as a sport, but no endeavour has been made to justify its claims to be an athletic exercise and an amusement as well. Surely such a game as roller skating, which combines in itself amusement, athletic exercise, and beyond all skill, is one which compares favourably with any sport followed by us."

Pleasure Beach, Blackpool.

MANY persons predicted a short life for roller skating, but one only needs to have a look at the Pleasure Beach Rink, Blackpool, and see the number of learners, and one will probably come away with a different opinion. Although this rink was only opened at the commencement of last season it soon become one of the most popular rendezvous for skaters. Mr. J. D. Tweddell, the manager, has had the large building redecorated and the floor re-surfaced, until now the pastime at this rink is a positive delight. The instructors are under the management of Mr. Harry Ingham.

Good Business at Blackpool.

MR. SULLIVAN, who is displaying considerable enterprise and originality in his management of the Colosseum Skating Rink at South Shore, Blackpool, is shortly introducing quite a new feature. On Friday evening, July 1, a skating ball will take place, when a unique programme will be presented. Plain skating will be strictly tabooed that evening, and the programme will be composed wholly of waltzes, two-steps, lancers, and other dances on skates. During the intervals between the dances, exhibitions of ornamental skating will be given by an expert of international repute. As the lady skaters will all be in summer attire and the gentlemen in flannels or tennis suits, the assembly will have quite a bright and picturesque appearance. Some of the best skaters from inland towns will probably attend. Another innovation introduced by Mr. Sullivan, and one which has found much favour with the ladies, is afternoon tea skating parties.

Monohan at Burslem.

ALL lovers of roller-skating have enjoyed the exhibition of "The Great Monohan" this week. Monohan performs in a most sensational and daring manner. His entertainment on Monday evening was marvellous, and was enthusiastically applauded by the goodly number of people present. Monohan opens his exhibition with a spread-eagle on the heels, traversing the rink several times in that position. He gave a fine imitation of a "kettledrum," while another, that of an express train, was loudly cheered. Apart from this novelty skating, Monohan performs very gracefully in an American two-step, in the course of which he introduces several clever toe spins. Undoubtedly his most daring feat is steeplechasing over twelve chairs, placed three deep, and about six yards apart. Monohan, without wasting time to get up speed, cleared the whole of the chairs.

Dorchester Rink Re-opening Date.

ON the recommendation of the Buildings Committee of the Dorchester Town Council it was decided to close the local rink for the remainder of the month of June and for the months of July and August. The rink will reopen in September.

Lawson Leaves Hanley.

VISITORS to the Olympia, Hanley, will miss a familiar figure from the rink through Mr. W. E. Lawson leaving on Saturday last. Mr. Lawson, who won the mile professional championship of Staffordshire a few months ago, was recognised to be the best all-round skater in the district. His trick and figure work is very smart, and, assisted by the fact that he is somewhat of a contortionist, he is able to perform some very remarkable antics on the rollers.

H. D. Anslow's Appointment.

H. D. ANSLOW has been appointed to the post of general-manager at the Empire Rink, Harrogate. Until quite recently he officiated as floor-manager at the Dragon Rink, in which capacity he earned golden opinions from all. He has been on the rollers ever since the craze caught on, and may be justly said to be as much at home on eight wheels as on terra firma. Anslow formerly held similar berths at the Sunderland, Dublin, and Leeds American Roller Rinks, and his wide experience of the various modes of rinking should prove highly acceptable to Empire patrons. He proudly displays trophies carried off within the last two years, numbering, amongst his doubtless fine achievements, first place in the following races: One mile championship of Harrogate, skates—motor-cycle (Mackay); relay race, with three opponents; mile race with Sam Gilbert (Coventry), and half-mile race at Dublin.

"Lucky Spot" Nights.

IN the course of a case against the proprietors of a Leeds skating rink under the Gaming Act of 1802, it was explained that there were placed on the raised edge of the rink numbers from one to 286. At a signal the skaters went to the edge of the rink and each stood in front of a number. Numbers were then drawn from a bag, and the persons who were standing before figures corresponding to those drawn were given prizes, which included books of free tickets and skate bags. The contention was that there was no exercise of skill, and the prizes were won absolutely by chance. On behalf of the proprietors of the rink it was stated that the "lucky spot" nights had been discontinued, and that they were organised more as an advertisement than anything else. The summonses were dismissed on payment of costs.

Clever Mumbles Skaters.

MASTER GEORGE TWOMEY is the son of Captain Twomey, the Mumbles Piermaster. Young Twomey, when eleven years old, went to the Neath Rink and won the one mile South Wales championship, the prize being a silver cup. At London he won the L.S.A. medal. Going to Neath again, he won the silver cup for the second time, and it then became his property. At Pontardawe he won the Swansea Valley Cup, and he has given exhibitions at Glanamman and Pontardulais, and on Saturday next he is open to race anyone in South Wales for a mile at the Mumbles Pier and concede 20 yards start. Master Twomey is twelve years of age, and has won two cups and eight medals during the eighteen months he has been skating.

Dolly Mitchell at Reading.

FOLLOWING on the visit of Monohan to Reading, Dainty Dolly Mitchell has been giving displays of interest to skaters and spectators alike, and so great has been her reception at the Central Rink that the proprietors have engaged her for another week. This charming little skater has been described as the daintiest and prettiest skater in the world, and her displays at Reading have met with tremendous receptions and applause. She excels at figure and fancy skating rather than speed. She executes difficult gyrations in perfect and elegant style.

Hockey at West Stanley.

THE hockey competition commenced last week at the West Stanley Skating Rink is being continued this week, when it is expected the final heat will be played on Saturday. It is attracting considerable attention.

"UNDER THE WHITE ENSIGN."

Admiral Sir Thomas Masterman ..... MR. WALTER MACEWAN
Captain John Hardy, C.B. ..... MR. E. VAUGHAN
Commander Hon. Reginald Mannering ..... MR. R. RAYMOND
Lieutenant Percy Milroy ..... MR. HARRY GILBEY
Mr. Arthur Cameron ..... MR. FREDERIC MONTI
Reid ..... MR. HARRY SEYMOUR
Clare Melrose ..... MISS EDITH LEWIS

Life on a battleship as it really exists is to be seen this week at the Surrey. The outside of the historic house is decorated from top to base with naval flags and bunting, and the entrances are adorned with specimens of naval warfare, amid which a field gun, eight 13.5 shells, and a like number of shrapnel—all Government property—figure formidably. Such instruments of war give only the merest suggestion of the realism which is to be found within the walls of the Surrey, for the sketch Under the White Ensign can claim to present the nearest approach to a veritable ironclad ever achieved on the music-hall stage. The quarter-deck of H.M.S. Inflexible has been reproduced from registered photographs, and is det to scale, every detail of the ship's equipment being observed, from the machine gun on the main deck to the flashlight dispensing its rays aloft. There is, moreover, a naval court-martial, the proceedings of which are in exact conformity with the regulations. Nor does realism end here, for the author is a retired naval commander, the paymaster of the play has actually held that position in real life, and even the marines who take the villain prisoner have served in that capacity on a man-of-war. Finally the sketch is produced by a retired naval officer—Mr. Roy Cochrane, the respected manager of the Surrey, having for ten years trod the deck of battleship.

With such a wealth of spectacular attractions the plot of the sketch becomes of only minor importance. Nevertheless, an engrossing story full of dramatic episodes and containing elements of novelty is furnished. In an admirable reproduction of the "ward-room" of H.M.S. Destructible, a party of officers have assembled to congratulate the Hon. Reginald Mannering on his appointment to an important command. In his speech of thanks the young officer announces his engagement to pretty Clare Melrose, much to the disgust of Lieut. Percy Milroy, who had hoped to secure the young lady for his own. He does not give up hope, however, for after a diverting "skylarking" scene, he gets the wine steward to drug Mannering's drink, with the result that the latter gets excited and attempts to assault Milroy, who has insulted Clare, but the blow is received by Captain Hardy, who rushes between them. The Naval Discipline Act, provides heavy penalties for drunkenness and for striking a superior officer, and Mannering is brought before a court-martial. Then it is that Clare proves herself worthy to be a sailor's bride. The court-martial sits, and the case for the prosecution makes things look very black for Mannering, when Clare gets admitted as a witness for the defence, and tells how she yielded to Milroy's solicitations and went to his rooms, having first, however, induced a friendly midshipman to hide within earshot. Here she not only extracts from the Lieutenant an admission that his accomplice had dosed Mannering with a powerful Chinese drug, but gains possession of a bottle of the narcotic, which she produces in court, together with the midshipman's affidavit confirming her statement. As a consequence Mannering is honourably acquitted and restored to his intrepid sweetheart while the Lieutenant is dismissed the service.

Miss Edith Lewis heads the company, and makes a ladylike Clare Melrose, charming in her scenes with her lover, and thrilling in her description of the adventure by which his innocence is proclaimed. Mr. R. Raymond acts the hero with virile power and excellent elocution, and Mr. Harry Gilbey brings dramatic qualities to bear in his impersonation of Milroy. Mr. Walter MacEwan, a sound actor with a well-measured delivery, makes a distinguished Admiral; Captain John Hardy has a breezy exponent in Mr. E. Vaughan, and an irrepressible midshipman who, besides aiding beauty in distress, provides a refreshing breath of comedy is represented in excellent style by Mr. Fredrick Monti. The uniforms and appointments, we are convinced, would pass the strictest scrutiny of the Admiralty department, and the whole production has won the approval, not only of the nightly-increasing audiences, but of members of the Navy Club and others connected with the naval world, who have made special visits to the hall. The scenery is all constructed in the telescopic fashion, by means of which it could be adapted to any stage, and the production will add to the attractiveness of many a variety bill.

"IRON BARS."

A Dramatic Episode, by Frances Delaval, Produced at the Islington Empire on Monday, June 20.

Philip Ainsley ..... MR. WM. MATTHEWS.
Jack Trevalion ..... MR. ARTHUR ELWYN.
Warder ..... MR. F. WILSON.
Magdalene ..... MISS FRANCES DELAVAL.
Housekeeper ..... MISS PHENIE POWER.

The scene is Philip Ainsley's studio in a village on the Cornish coast. The famous artist is about to be married to the sister of Jack Trevalion, a young squire. A conspicuous object in Ainsley's studio is the picture of a charming young fisher-girl. It is a masterpiece in its way, and when publicly exhibited did much to make the painter known. Trevalion, who has called at the studio, has his attention attracted by the portrait, and asks what has become of the original, who he himself knew years ago. The reply he receives is that the girl, Magdalene, went to Rome, where she died of fever. Trevalion confesses that he was much interested in the young girl, and had he not thought that Ainsley had a prior claim he would have asked her to become his wife. The artist thereupon tells his friend that he has had a lucky escape, for the girl had a furious temper. Trevalion taking his departure, and the artist, communing with himself, admits that while his picture is considered a masterpiece he hated the original, and wishes that he could forget her as easily as he draws the curtains that conceals the painting from view. The story he told Trevalian was false; the woman is confined behind "iron bars" on a charge of having murdered her own child. A thunderstorm threatens, and from his housekeeper Ainsley learns that a mad woman has escaped from the asylum at Portland and the keepers are searching for her. Ainsley is evidently alarmed, for he fears that it is Magdalene, and that she will pay him a visit. If she does he is determined to kill her, whatever the risk, rather than she should interfere with his plans. Years ago he made Magdalene, the artist's model, his lawful wife. During his absence she enters the studio by the window, and here she is discovered by her husband wearing the same garments that she wore when he painted her picture, she having discovered them hidden away in the studio and hastily donned them. He declares to her that the child of whom she is in search has been murdered by him, and that he has caused her to be imprisoned on the false charge of having killed it. The woman, rendered desperate, destroys the picture of herself with a knife, and in the course of a fierce struggle with Ainsley she stabs him to the heart. At this moment a warder from the asylum makes his appearance, and takes charge of her. While the handcuffs are being placed on her wrists, she exclaims, "I'm nothing to him now," and the curtain falls.

Miss Frances Delaval was completely successful in riveting the attention of the audience by her very powerful assumption of insanity. It was indeed a realistic and thrilling performance. Mr. Wm. Matthews ably depicted the villain of the piece, and Mr. Arthur Elwyn was a manly representative of the young squire. Mr. F. Wilson as the warder and Miss Phenie Power as the housekeeper filled minor rôles in satisfactory style. The sketch, which was excellent staged, met with a favourable reception.

Mr. Arthur J. Barclay, whose administrative ability and initiative have full scope at Herne Bay as director of the Urban Council Entertainments in that popular resort, has sent us a photograph of the new alfresco theatre he has designed and had erected on the East Cliff for the Jollity Boys. As will be seen in the above illustration, it is flanked by two towers, and the Tudor style has been chosen. This has a very nice effect, which is added to at night, as it is well lighted. A portion of the cliff has been fenced with white railings, and the ground has been prepared in terraces and gravelled, so that it keeps perfectly dry. In the centre are steps, which enable the public to reach the chairs with ease. There is accommodation for 2,000 people within the fenced-in space. It may be added that not only was the stage designed by Mr. A. J. Barclay, but that the painting which gives such a realistic touch to the towers and back of the platform was done by him.

New Rink for Weymouth.

Rinking on the North-East Coast.

RINKING at Tynemouth Palace, the most fashionable resort of entertainment on the North-east Coast, is becoming more popular than ever, and the season is now in full swing. On Thursday, the 15th inst., a fancy masked carnival took place under the most favourable of auspices, there being over 200 skaters and about 2,000 spectators. Handsome prizes were given for the most historical and most original costumes, most humorous make-up, two-step competition, best juvenile and best fancy costume, &c. Much of the success here is due to the excellent state of the huge floor, the Richardson skates, the bright and breezy music, the elaborate electric and limelight arrangements, the beautiful sea view, and the untiring efforts of Mr. Knox, the affable rink manager.

No Bidders for Plymouth Rink.

AT the Law Chambers, Plymouth, last week, Mr. Hosking (Skardon, Sons, and Hosking) offered for auction the Ebrington-street Roller Skating Rink. The property included the rink and entrance hall, which were erected last autumn. The skating surface, which measures 185ft. by 75ft., is surrounded by a promenade and seating accommodation. The premises were held by the Plymouth Skating Rink Company, under two leases, each for ten years, from March 25, 1909, at a rent of £600 per annum, determinable at the tenant's option at the end of the fifth year. When the property was put up for auction no bidders were forthcoming. Mr. Hoskings offered to "throw in" the furniture, decorations, skates, &c., but though he asked for a bid as low as £100, no one would offer, and the sale fell through.

THE L.C.C. AND AMUSEMENTS.

SUNDAY CINEMATOGRAPH ENTERTAINMENTS.

On the L.C.C. agenda paper on Tuesday last there appeared the following paragraph in the report of the Theatres and Music Halls Committee:—"The premises known as the London Bridge Picture Palace and Cinematograph Theatre, and situated at Nos. 116-118, Borough High-street, having been kept open for cinematograph entertainments on Sunday, February 27, 1910, contrary to the conditions laid down by the Council on February 15, 1910, we instructed the solicitor to take proceedings in respect of the breach of the conditions upon which the licence was granted. A summons was accordingly taken out against the Bermondsey Bioscope Company, Limited, and was heard before Mr. Cecil Chapman at the Tower Bridge Police-court on May 11, 1910. It was contended on behalf of the defendants that the Council had no power under the Cinematograph Act to impose the condition as to not opening the premises on Sundays, Good Friday, or Christmas Day. The magistrate, after hearing the case at considerable length, adjourned the matter until May 24 in order that he might look into the authorities cited and consider his decision. As a result, Mr. Chapman decided that the Council had acted ultra vires in making it a condition of the licence granted by them under the Cinematograph Act, 1909, that the premises should not be opened on Sundays, Good Friday, or Christmas Day, and he therefore dismissed the summons and awarded the defendants £5 5s. for costs. We have instructed the solicitor to take the necessary steps to get a case stated for the opinion of the High Court and to uphold the Council's interests in the matter." The report was not reached till a quarter past one on Wednesday morning, and as it was then "opposed" the matter of its approval had to stand over.

The Council agreed to a recommendation that a certificate should be given to a cinematograph hall proposed to be erected in Coldharbour-lane provided that the building be commenced within six months. It is intended to accommodate 400 people. A music licence is to be applied for.

Approval was given to plans for exits from pit and gallery at the Lewisham Hippodrome.

The Council sanctioned drawings by Messrs. F. Matcham and Co. for the reconstruction of the Middlesex Music Hall, Drury-lane, on the site of the existing hall and adjoining premises. The new hall will have accommodation for about 2,700 persons. The building is to be commenced within six months, and the structural requirements are very voluminous.

The Theatres and Music Halls Committee reported as follows:—"At a recent inspection of the New Cross Empire it was found that certain of the gallery exit doors were chained and padlocked during the time the public were on the premises. We are of opinion that a notice under the 45th Section of the Metropolitan Board of Works (Various Powers) Act, 1882, should be served on the person keeping open the premises, so as to enable proceedings to be taken should the exit doors again be found to be improperly fastened. We recommend—That a notice under Section 45 of the Metropolitan Board of Works (Various Powers) Act, 1882, containing the undermentioned requirements, and specifying seven days as the time within which they are to be complied with be prepared by the solicitor; that it be sealed in duplicate, and be served upon the person by whom the premises known as the New Cross Empire, New Cross-road and Watson-street, Deptford, are kept open for public entertainments—(i.) That all doors and gates affording means of exit from the said premises shall be thrown open at the conclusion of each performance and shall be kept open during the departure of the public from the premises; (ii.) that all such doors and gates shall be fastened during the time they are authorised to be closed by automatic bolts only of a pattern or patterns which shall have been approved for the said doors or gates by the Council; (iii.) that such doors and gates may be closed during the times fixed for the admission of the public to, or the presence of the public in, the said premises, on condition that there shall not then be upon any such door or gate any fastening other than an automatic bolt, in proper working order, of the pattern approved by the Council for such door or gate, and on condition that on every occasion when the said premises are open for the admission of the public each of such doors or gates shall, immediately prior to the admission of the public thereto, be fully opened and closed again for the purpose of ascertaining that the same is in proper working order." This was agreed to.

Sanction was given to the drawings by Messrs. Matcham for the reconstruction of the Royal Standard Music Hall, Victoria-street. The new premises will have accommodation for about 2,600 persons.

The Council approved the transfer of the licence for music and dancing of the Camden Theatre, granted to Sidney Marler, to Charles Gulliver.

The transfer of the licence of the Cinematograph Hall, Tottenham Court-road, from Adolph Rosenthal to Frederick Arthur Welch was approved.

The provisional licences granted to the Wandsworth Central Picture Palace and Wandsworth Central Skating Rink were confirmed on the satisfactory completion of the premises.

Confirmation was given to the provisional licence for music and dancing granted to the Wurtemberg Hall, Clapham.

"A WIFE FOR A SONG."

Gretchen Van Gelt ..... MISS ELSA HOPE
Hon. Luke Sharpe ..... MR. GUILBERT DURSTON
Mr. Fairlie Hook—ahem!.. MR. ROBERT DURSTON

A striking success attended the production of this bright musical trifle, a special feature of which was the catchy and agreeable music, each of the three artists in the cast being provided with an effective musical number. The scene is laid in the reception-room of one Mr. Hook—ahem! an unscrupulous matrimonial agent. To him enters a needy sprig of the nobility, the Hon. Luke Sharpe, who is badly in want of a wife who can afford to keep him. Fortunately for him, the very individual he requires turns up in the comely person of a Dutch girl, Gretchen Van Gelt, and the two young people soon resolve to make a match of it. It appears that Sharpe's dulcet voice has won him his bride, thus realising the title of the piece.

Miss Elsa Hope made a winsome and withal amusing Dutch maiden, her yodelling song was charmingly rendered. Mr. Robert Durston sings and acts well as the matrimonial agent; while Mr. Guilbert Durston displays considerable vocal and histrionic ability as the Dude. The cordial reception given to the musical trifle by the Peckham audience will no doubt attend it elsewhere.

Reynolds and Donegan's Return.

EARLE REYNOLDS and Nellie Donegan, the famous skaters, will shortly arrive in England for Europe on the Mauretania. They will be starred at the Palace Theatre. In September they go to the Folies Bergère, and will be billed in Germany during October and November, Austria during December, and so on right through the principal European capitals.

To The Era Shilling Fund for the Music Hall Home Miss Edie King has contributed 2s. 6d. and the Brothers Miller 7s. 6d.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The pianoforte recital of Miss Maud Agnes Winter, L.T.C.L. Professor, given at the Trinity College on Monday afternoon, was well attended. The programme commenced with Edward MacDowell's "Sonata Tragica," of which Miss Winter gave an excellent account, being very successful in the Largo con maesta, in some respects the most attractive movement in the sonata. Claude Debussy's delicate "Reflets dans l'eau" was played with refinement; and in three works of Chopin—Prelude, Op. 28, No. 4, Nocturne No. 2, Op. 27, and the popular Scherzo, Op. 31, Miss Agnes Winter deserved much praise. The beautiful nocturne requires a far more accomplished pianist than even the showy scherzo, and Miss Winter gave the poetical spirit without which all the effect of Chopin's creation is lost. A graceful Gavotte in E, by G. E. Bambridge and Liszt's familiar Rhapsodie Hongroise No. 2 completed the pianoforte selections. Miss Maud Agnes Winter, who had a most hearty reception, was assisted by Miss Hilda Felstead, vocalist, heard in "Autumn Storms" (Greig) and Schumann's "Widmung." Miss Bertha Tomlin was the accompanist.

The orchestral concert of the Trinity College was given at Queen's Hall on Wednesday evening, and attracted a huge audience. Mr. Wilhelm Sachse conducted, and the orchestra, which included a large number of professional musicians as well as students, commenced the concert with an able performance of Cherubini's "Medea" overture. A young student of the College, Master Richard Johnson (pupil of Mr. G. E. Bambridge), played the "Allegro con brio" from Beethoven's Concerto in C for pianoforte and orchestra with no small amount of intelligence. Master Johnson is certainly a clever boy, for he not only played the solo instrument well, but has composed a Cadenza to this movement which proved well in keeping with the subject. The audience rewarded the talented little performer with three hearty recalls. In Sir C. V. Stanford's pretty song "There's a bower of roses" Miss Bertha Tomlin's purity of tone and clear diction can be warmly praised. Miss Alice Lees, set down for Saint-Saëns B minor Concerto for violin, was unable to appear, and an apology was made from the platform. The Allegro Moderato from Horatio Parker's fine Organ Concerto in E flat was admirably played by Mr. Harry Gray, a pupil of Dr. Pearce. Mr. Gray was well supported by the orchestra, which also artistically accompanied Miss Hilda Felstead in her clever singing of the "Habanera" from Carmen. Miss Felstead sang in English, with excellent enunciation, and had no easy task, for the words do not fit the "Habanera" any too well, although the opera on the whole goes capitally in English. The performance of the entire Symphony in E flat of Haydn by the orchestra was somewhat a mistake, as in the time several students could have given examples of their ability, and there is no lack of that among the pupils at the Trinity College, and the interval which followed the symphony was hardly needed in a long programme. Mr. Patrick Thayer was much applauded for a quite brilliant performance of the Allegro Affettuoso from Schumann's Concerto in A minor for piano and orchestra, and Miss Briana Prager displayed much talent in Mendelssohn's famous Capriccio Brillante for piano in B minor. A pupil of Mr. Copland, Miss Gertrude A. Wallis, sang "Che faro" from Gluck's "Orfeo" with marked ability; and Mozart's vocal duet "Sull'aria" ("Nozze di Figaro"), sung by Miss Mabel Hardy and Miss Edith M. Davies, was an interesting feature in the concert. Mr. Sidney H. Sheppard was set down for "The two Grenadiers" (Schumann), and the programme concluded with Weber's "Oberon" Overture by the orchestra.

THE IMPERIAL, CANNING TOWN.

The genial manager, Mr. Frank Clarke, has an exceedingly brilliant programme for this week, the premier item being supplied by Tarro Miyake, champion ju-jitsu wrestler. The performance throughout is quite good, for in the first portion Miyake shows the different "holds" to the audience, having for his subject a gentleman from the front. The screams of laughter the latter causes by his antics the while he is on the stage is quite unexpected, for one looks forward to intense excitement. This, however, is in store, for on the evening of our visit Miyake had bouts with two good men, one lasting over seven minutes, all concerned being well rewarded with abundance of applause. Joe Hayman (of Hayman and Franklin) is appearing as a single turn, and should feel well satisfied with the reception accorded him. His chatter, as usual, is thoroughly enjoyed, and a touch of pathos is added in his song "Life's a very funny proposition after all," which is well rendered.

Miss Dolly Elsworthy is billed to appear with her company in that charming little romantic sketch Nana, but on Monday evening she apologised for being unable to produce it, owing to the sudden illness of her principal man. She, however, appeared singly and gave three songs: "Modesty forbids," "In the garden meet me when the moon is shining," and "Ain't I a silly little kid?" the last—in the character of a juvenile—being extremely good. In her new venture Miss Elsworthy is quite at home, her style being refreshing. Mr. R. Dunning, with his ventriloquial companions, is exceedingly good, the repartee throughout being distinctly original, and the singing a special feature.

The Four Kahns, in their magical act, present a tastefully-arranged fit-up, the charming stage presence of the three ladies adding greatly to the picture. The tricks performed, mostly by one of the ladies, are quite smart, their finale being marked by well-deserved applause. Nash and Noel indulge in some cross-talk which is decidedly above the ordinary standard, and their song, "We don't care a button if it snows," is tuneful and well written. Miss Amy Savile, a dainty little comedienne, has a good style; and Mr. Randolph Sutton, a smartly-dressed light comedian, sings two good songs: "Walk about" and "Mr. Man in the moon." Many interesting films are displayed on the Bioscope, particularly The Conscript, which is a delightful story. Mr. H. A. Knight conducts a fine orchestra.

THE GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The students of the Guildhall School of Music gave an orchestral concert in the fine hall of the City of London School on Wednesday evening. In the absence of the principal, Dr. Cummings, Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock conducted, and the orchestra successfully performed Saint-Saëns' overture "La Princesse Jaune." To play Schubert's Symphony in B minor ("The Unfinished"), one of the composer's most beautiful inspirations, was a somewhat ambitious attempt for students, but the young musicians played really well and with due regard to style, good tone, and intelligent execution in the two movements, Allegro moderato (B minor) and Andante con moto (E major), the latter being particularly well rendered. Miss Margaret Crawford, who sang Saint-Saëns Aria, "Softly awakes my heart," from Samson and Delilah, received enthusiastic applause, while Miss Dorothy Holden greatly distinguished herself in a very clever performance of Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor; the orchestral portions, so important in this Concerto, were also admirably played. The concert ended with the Valse and Finale from Sullivan's "Masquerade Suite," Merchant of Venice, given with much spirit by the orchestra. Miss Jenny Hyman presided at the pianoforte.

Mexboro' Feast.

The excellent circuit of Yorkshire fairs, principally controlled by the local showman, Councillor G. T. Tuby, of Doncaster, has no better example of up-to-date perfection and success than the celebrated Feast of Mexborough.

For many centuries, when Mexborough was but a village, the feast was held, closely identified with the patronal festival of the parish church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

It is a time of general holiday, and, following long-established custom, friends and neighbours from the adjoining towns and villages troop into Mexborough to keep the feast.

In the olden times the people went in their hundreds to enjoy the fair; to-day they may be reckoned by the tens of thousands, for the town is in the centre of a long chain of colliery towns, densely populated.

The principal fair-ground is the one under Mr. Tuby's management, and is situated near the railway station. The subsidiary show-ground, only recently opened out, has its entrance from the main street, but both grounds are well within sight of one another.

On the principal fair-ground were G. T. Tuby and Sons' mammoth coliseum of moving pictures, and the same firm's other attractions—the Gordon-Bennett motor-car set, the racing birds and mountain ponies, the juvenile roundabouts, the shooting saloon, and the side show, the Teddy bear jungle.

Amongst the other concerns present were Hobson's cinematograph and theatre of varieties, Professor Valio's temple of occult mysteries, R. Houldsworth's flying pigs and waltzing balloons, Amos' steam swings, Fisher's highflyers, Pullen's shooting saloon and park swings, Shaw's shooter, variety stalls, and throwing games, W. H. Doubtfire's houp-la circles, throwing games, and varieties, J. Doubtfire's similar concerns, Gledstone's helter-skelter tower, Leiske's big wheel, Pullen and Shaw's toy bazaars and pannum stalls, Throwing games, novelty frames, striking machines, and other amusements of a minor character were supplied by J. Moore, H. Harris, Doubtfire and Sons, Shaw and Sons, Easthope, Middlebrook, Silverwood, Brannan, Mrs. Walker, and other caterers.

On the No. 2 fair-ground were Farrer and Tyler's big machine—the scenic railway and the electric coliseum of animated pictures; P. Collins's novel machine—the frolicsome Teddy bears and the katzen-jammer castle; T. Harniess's galloping horses, Sopp's toy bazaar and pannum stall; Johnson's gingerbread stall; and houp-la frames and other amusements by various caterers.

Guild Meeting at Mexboro' Feast.

The organising chaplain, the Rev. T. Horne, has been able this year to again visit Mexborough for the feast. Although it is not a great centre of show-life, like Dewsbury or Hull, where meetings of the Guild are usually held, it is a useful thing, in the interests of the show business, for the chaplain to visit some of the minor fairs.

Owing to the extreme heat of the Sunday afternoon, the meeting had to be shortened, and the speeches, of necessity, were brief. The gathering took place in Tuby's coliseum. Mr. Tuby, a vice-president of the Guild, occupied the chair, and was supported by the Rev. T. Horne, Messrs. J. Amos, J. Doubtfire, A. Fisher, W. H. Doubtfire, J. Shaw, H. Harris, A. Pullen, J. Moore, and other showmen tenants of the fair.

Speeches and Business Done.

The chairman, in opening the proceedings, remarked that, with the organising chaplain amongst them, it was his agreeable duty to ask him to explain with (considering the extraordinary heat of the day) all brevity the work of the society, and then get to work to enrol members.

Mr. Horne then, in a speech of fifteen minutes' duration, referred to the more recent work of the Guild with regard to private Bill legislation, the Movable Dwellings Bill, the defence of fairs, and local bye-laws. At the conclusion of the address the following members were enrolled: Messrs. J. Amos, 10s. 6d.; J. Doubtfire, 10s. 6d.; W. H. Doubtfire, 10s. 6d.; A. Pullen, 7s.; J. Shaw, 5s.; A. Fisher, 5s; H. Harris, 5s.; J. J. Shaw, 5s.; and J. Moore, 2s. 6d. (second subscription).

Guild Service at Night.

A very striking feature at Mexborough Feast is the service of the Showmen's Guild, held on the Feast Sunday in Tuby's show. This has been held for several years past, and is highly appreciated both by showpeople and townsmen.

The Vicar of Mexborough (the Rev. W. H. F. Bateman) is honorary local chaplain, and always invites the Rev. T. Horne to attend the feast, to preach at the parish church, and, of course, to conduct the Guild service at night.

Tuby's large show pavilion was thronged by a devout and attentive congregation. The united choirs of the parish church and the district church of St. George led the singing, the Vicar intoned the Guild service, and the Guild chaplain preached, his theme being lessons from the life and character of the patron saint of Mexborough, St. John the Baptist. He referred to the stern discipline of the Baptist's life, his singleness of purpose, devotion to duty, and wonderful humility. He applied the lessons of his subject to his congregation, showpeople and townspeople alike.

Besides preaching at the parish church at morning service, the Rev. T. Horne addressed a united gathering of the young people's Bible classes of Mexborough Parish Schools in the afternoon on "Shows and Showmen." The church was well filled, and great interest was shown.

The Guild Chaplain on Tour.

The Rev. T. Horne will pay his annual visit to the Potteries to-morrow (Sunday, June 26). The place of meeting will be P. Collins's show, Burslem Wakes ground, at 3.30 p.m.

LORD JOHN SANGER'S CIRCUS ON TOUR.

This magnificent combination of circus and menagerie, with its delightful mixture of the real old-fashioned circus and modern improvements and up-to-date turns is doing excellent business on its provincial tour. Being unable to secure a sufficiently large open space in Manchester last week, the management wisely decided to make short visits to various surrounding places, and succeeded in drawing large suburban audiences.

The itinerary of last week was Cheadle, Withington, Stretford, Altrincham, Knutsford, and Chester, en route for North Wales. As two performances are given daily, this gives some idea of the energy and enterprise of the management; but the concern being manned by some hundred and thirty persons, all is in easy readiness each morning. At each place the attractive procession parades the principal streets at noon, returning to the circus-tent in time for the two o'clock performance.

This show generally secures good patronage in the best parts of the house, the advance booking proving highly satisfactory. The evening performance at 8 p.m. draws a popular crowd, and one has only to see the vast audience enjoying this entertainment to realise that people of all classes will patronise really good shows, and amongst the travelling circuses of to-day that of Lord John Sanger makes no idle boast when it bills itself as "The Greatest Road Show in the World."

The splendid tent, with its ample and comfortable accommodation, its up-to-date installation of electric light, its well-arranged ring, and, above all, its first-class entertainment by highly skilled performers and their well-trained animals, all combine to make "Sanger's" one of the finest amusement enterprises of the day.

In addition to the regular circus programme, a special attraction to lovers of daring and apparently impossible feats is provided by "Cyclo," who allows the wheels of a large motor-car containing four persons to pass over his body. All the animal turns are excellent, and it is difficult to say which draws greatest approval from the audience. Perhaps the elephants delight the youngsters most, and although we never previously enjoyed a visit to the dentist, we must admit to enjoying thoroughly the drollery of the elephant dentist and his patient, humorously assisted as they were by two quaint clowns and a most amiable coloured gentleman. There is also an extremely interesting turn employing three elephants, three horses, and their trainers, the six performers forming effective tableaux and showing a mighty display of mind over matter.

The clowns rapidly make friends with the youthful portion of the audience, Pimpo especially adding to their glee as the performance progresses. This whimsical fellow has friends amongst all kinds of animals, for he introduces a football team of dogs, who play a wildly exciting match; he has a boxing match with an elephant, and also brings on a youthful Teddy bear, who delights the audience with his unquenchable thirst.

Amongst the more serious turns on the programme are the Zampos, the elastic bounders; Les Belles Fondants, in an up-to-date wire act; the Austins, premier equestrians; the Airlees, human flying machines; and Miss Lina, with her highly trained horse Hawcombe, showing the methods of the haute école; each in turn giving a high-class performance. The programme is brought to an exciting finish by the evergreen equestrian drama, Dick Turpin's Ride to York. At the close of each performance the animals are fed and visitors are permitted to visit the menagerie.

E. H. BOSTOCK'S GRAND INTERNATIONAL RAILROAD CIRCUS AT DUNDEE.

This fine show completed a five-days' visit to Dundee on Tuesday evening, the 21st inst. The circus was located at the Esplanade, and attracted large audiences at each of the two performances daily. The programme is a very high-class one, and contains several items of outstanding excellence. The performance of the Tokio Troupe was vociferously received, their startling tricks being gone through with an alertness and charm that are unapproachable. One of the most graceful circus acts ever seen in Dundee was contributed by Mlle. Chloe Convere and her celebrated cake-walking horse, Kentucky Beau, and met with the most generous appreciation. Mlle. Helga Yensen must be congratulated on the display given by her cleverly-trained pony and dogs Paquito and Neige. The Erneste Family created much excitement with their equestrian novelty, at the finish of which the four riders leap from the ground to the back of the one horse whilst going at full speed around the arena. The trick riding of Miss Pinder was received with marked approbation, as was also an exceedingly neat and clever riding exhibition by the Prairie Girls on the bronchos, Mocassin and Rattlesnake. M. Erneste and Charlerol perform some daring evolutions on horseback; Mlle. Leoville was much admired in her wire-walking act; Johnny Watson and his canine pupils came in for a great reception; Harex and Jabez got an enthusiastic reception, the extraordinary positions in which they play their violins being very comical; the double trapeze act by the Lorettes was skilful in the extreme; a clever globe walking performance by Mlle. Florence was heartily applauded; a very daring balancing trapeze act by Mlle. Ida Evilo created quite a furore, while shouts of laughter greeted the Valdo Boys in their comic acrobatic act entitled "The Eccentric Motor Men." A great sensation was caused by the feats of strength by Mons. Abex, the schoolboy Hercules, who concluded his share of the entertainment by lifting with his teeth a fully-loaded motor-car. The circus is well supplied with clowns, viz., Nimble Nip, Wee Willie, and Little Tony, whose eccentricities kept the audience in good humour throughout. The show is under the personal management of Mr. Frank Bostock, who must be congratulated on the excellent and smartly-worked programme. A word of praise is due to the band, and a special word to the groom on the fine appearance of the animals under his charge.

THE LATE JAMES DOONER'S FUNERAL.

Amidst many manifestations of esteem and affection, James Dooner was laid to rest at Arnos Vale Cemetery, Bristol, on Friday, June 17. Prior to conveying the body by train from Bargoed, Wales, to the family residence at Bedminster, Bristol, an impressive service was held at the Junction Hotel, in the presence of the family and the whole staff of the exhibition, the Rev. — Richards, of St. Gladys, Bargoed, took the opening part of the Burial Service.

In a brief, but deeply touching eulogium of the famous showman's life, he referred to his sterling character, fortitude under suffering, and devotion to his family. Of his public services and work as a showman, he dwelt with marked appreciation, and tendered to the family the sympathy of their many friends in Bargoed, and the still greater area of the part of the country where the late James Dooner was so well known and respected as a travelling showman.

After the journey to Bristol, the funeral procession started from West-street, Bedminster, where a great assembly of prominent showmen from all parts of the country had gathered to do honour to their old friend. The cortége was headed by a carriage loaded with floral tributes; the hearse drawn by four black horses, was followed by twelve coaches.

In the first were Richard Dooner (son), Mrs. Jacob Studt, jun. (daughter), Mrs. H. Studt, jun. (daughter), Mrs. Miller (daughter), and Miss Lily Dooner (daughter).

In the second coach were Mr. and Mrs. Hancock (brother-in-law and sister), Miss Hancock, Miss Dodo Hancock (niece), and Mr. Miller (son-in-law).

In the sixth coach were Mr. and Mrs. Bunter, Mrs. Lewington, Mrs. Vokes, and Mr. C. Pillenger.

In the seventh coach were Mr. and Mrs. John North and Mr. and Mrs. T. Butlin.

In the eighth coach were Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Butlin, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Hill, and Mrs. Lewis.

In the ninth coach were Mr. T. Clarke, Mr. R. Chipperfield, Mr. Sidney White, Mr. Orton, and Mr. Griffiths.

In the tenth coach were Mr. and Mrs. Nash and Mr. and Mrs. G. White.

In the twelfth coach were Mr. J. Johnson, Mr. Percy Scard, Mr. Gus Harrington, and Miss Maude Iniss.

In addition to the above mourners a large concourse of friends followed on foot to the cemetery, where the interment took place, attended by many expressions of sympathy and sorrow.

Amongst the large number of floral tributes were beautiful emblems by Mr. and Mrs. Dooner, Miss Lilian Dooner, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Studt, jun., Mr. and Mrs. Birchall, jun., Mr. and Mrs. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. H. Studt, jun., Mr. and Mrs. W. Mr. Richard Dooner thanks all friends most sincerely for their sympathy in his sad bereavement.

FILM GOSSIP.

"Wake-up, England."

Mr. Gilbert-Smith's new picture-play, adapted from his poem "Wake-up, England!" was produced at the Electric Palace, Marble Arch, this week. Those who received invitations for the postponed date, and found themselves unable to be present, should write or telephone to the Secretary, 5, Green-street, Leicester-square, and stalls will be reserved for them.

New Electric Theatre Company.

The prospectus is issued of the British Bio-Electrics, Ltd., which has a share capital of £60,000, in 600,000 shares of 2s. each, of which 545,000 shares will be available for working capital. The company acquires the Ladbroke Hall Electric Theatre, which is earning a substantial revenue, the Hanover Hall Picture Palace, and three other properties in course of reconstruction and equipment, together with a freehold site in Birmingham for the erection of another theatre. The company will also acquire rights and options in connection with negotiations now proceeding for fourteen other sites and buildings. The issue provides a working capital of over £40,000 in excess of the sum required to complete the work of fitting up the theatres already secured, and this amount will be available for the further extension of the business. Profit estimates are set forth in the prospectus based on the certified net earnings of Ladbroke Hall.

Cinematograph Show Afloat.

Sir Ernest Shackleton, who reached Liverpool last Friday from Montreal, delivered a lecture, illustrated by cinematograph views, on board the liner Virginian. Non-inflammable films were used.

Ascot in Kinemacolor.

Another picture novelty is a pictorial representation of Ascot week, taken by the Kinemacolor process, which has been shown at the Palace this week. Ascot this year was a somewhat sombre function; but the bioscope operator found colour and life in the horses and jockeys, as well as in the inanimate surroundings of the course.

Co-operation of Film Companies.

The Co-operative Cinematograph Company has been formed, under an agreement with the London Cinematograph Company (1909) Ltd., for the acquisition by this company of the goodwill, stock-in-trade, machinery, and accessories in connection with the film-hiring and picture-production department of that company. The first directors are A. Rosenthal, S. B. Lawrence, and T. K. Grant.

Farm Life in Australia.

Mr. B. North, secretary of the Ripon Agricultural Society, has received the following communication from Mr. H. C. Smart, from the office of the High Commissioner of the Commonwealth of Australia, London: "I should be obliged if you will let me know whether you will have space available at your forthcoming show for a tent measuring about 40ft. by 30ft., in which it is proposed to give cinematograph lantern shows illustrating farm-life in Australia. As all the regulations made by the Secretary of State under the Cinematograph Act, 1909, and by the London County Council will be most rigidly carried out, I presume that there will not be any objection on the part of the local authorities to the giving of such a show. I might add that no charge will be made, of course, for admission." Mr. North has replied accepting the offer on behalf of the society.

Cinematographed a Lion Hunt.

After a five weeks' lion hunt, Mr. Cherry Kearton, the well-known naturalist-photographer, has just returned to Nairobi, in British East Africa, with some splendid cinematograph pictures of natives spearing lions. Altogether four lions were killed. The pictures were taken under great difficulty, as Mr. Kearton was ill with fever at the time, and had to be carried to the hunt on a stretcher.

Huge Sum for Moving Pictures.

Jack Johnson, Sam Berger (representing Jeffries), and Tex Rickard and Jack Gleason (the managers for Johnson and Jeffries) met last week in San Francisco, and agreed to sell the moving-picture privileges of the Jeffries-Johnson combat for £30,000—£10,000 going to Jeffries, £10,000 to Johnson, and £10,000 to Rickard and Gleason. The firm that secured the prize makes no condition other than that the men must enter the ring at 1.30 p.m. (4.30 p.m. New York time, and 9.30 p.m. London time), the money to be paid whether the match lasts only one round or the limit of forty-five. Rickard strenuously insists that the moving-picture men have not tried to secure a promise as to the length of the match. He says:—"If these men buy us out, they'll have to gamble on the contest going one round or going twenty rounds. That's what we expected to do, and I know no man who could approach either Johnson or Jeffries with any proposition to put up a show for a few rounds for the sake of the films. Johnson will win the first round if he can, and Jeffries feels the same way about it."

"An Hour at the Cinematograph."

A most interesting article was published under the title of "An Hour at the Cinematograph" by Vanity Fair last week. In the course of his remarks the writer says:—"The cinematograph can never die—never, at all events, until it is supplemented by something infinitely superior, which, indeed, it is impossible to foresee or contemplate at the moment of writing. And even to-day it is an unexploited experience to thousands of the citizens of London—they have not yet realised all the wonder of this most delightful invention. To such I say that an hour at a cinematograph theatre, with its moving pictures of actual life, its superb depictions of the most vivid drama, its thrilling records of the most splendid of our operatic productions, will come as a revelation of undreamed-of possibilities and accomplishment."

The Troubles of a Raw Recruit.

Eclair's have released a very amusing film, with the title, "The Order is to March." An exceedingly raw recruit is being put through his pacings, and at length, wearied by his clumsiness, the drill-sergeant orders him to march, adding "You shall stop when I tell you." At once the "rooky" marches onwards, and, as the sergeant is called away, and he receives no orders to stop, the poor unfortunate commences his unending march. He charges into two washerwomen, pushes a motor off, collides with a tramcar, and finally walks over a parapet into the street below. He is at once carried to hospital, where he continues his motions in bed. At length the sergeant is summoned, who, grasping the situation, at once orders him to "Halt," and the recruit drops at once into a sound sleep.

Hogarth, "the Film Detective."

Edison's give us a most exciting detective story in "A Case of Identity." Hogarth receives a visit from a foreigner, who, being unable to speak English, commences to write, when he drops dead. Hogarth searches the man, and, finding the tailor's name on his clothing, seeks out the sartorial artist, and there learns the stranger's name. The next day he reads in the paper that the man who dropped dead at his feet is to sail for Europe at mid-day. Convinced of trickery at work, Hogarth secures a berth on the boat, and there finds a man who is extremely like the dead stranger, and a girl, calling herself his daughter. In a short while Hogarth discovers that the young lady is evidently in love, the object of her affections seemingly being a deck-hand, who is thus disguised to travel near his fiancée. Hogarth manages to enter the double's room, where he learns that the man is in the employ of a prince, who intends to force the girl into marriage. He also finds evidence that the secret of the man's power over the girl comes from a note, purporting to be from her father, she, of course, being unaware that he died in the detective's office. But the villainy is soon unmasked, and the man is, after a desperate struggle, arrested.

Empire Day Parade at Toronto.

The patriotism of young Canada is being strikingly demonstrated by cinematograph at the Palace Theatre. The pictures, which reproduce a genuinely impressive parade of Canada's 3,000 boy cadets at Toronto on Empire Day, will be shown for some weeks. The scenes are:—The March Through the Streets of Toronto to the Drill Ground, The Arrival of General French and Staff, A March Past in Column, The Consecration of the Colours, The Presentation of Colours to Kneeling Ensigns, The Ensigns Wheeling and Showing the Flags to the Troops, which Present Arms, The Departure of General French. The smartness of the lads' uniform and their serious, upright bearing throughout are particularly striking.

Mr. Whiteley's Show for Old People.

Last week a large number of the old men and women inmates of the Salford Workhouse were invited by Mr. Whiteley, proprietor of the animated pictures exhibition at the Central Hall, Gardner-street, Pendleton, to witness the performance. About 300 of the old men and 180 of the old women visited the show, with the consent of the Salford Guardians. On learning that there were present two old women aged eighty-four years, Mr. Whiteley gave them a shilling each at the close of the performance, and one old man, aged eighty-two, also received a shilling. The old people enjoyed the show thoroughly. Mr. Whiteley intends to extend another invitation in about three months' time to the old people.

Pathé's New List.

Next week Pathé's will release a large number of subjects, the titles of which are:—Why He Had to Tip, An Episode in 1812, The Bride of the Haunted Castle, Nick Winter, A Heart of Gold, Seal Catching off Tasmania, A Helping Hand, Betty and the Fireworks, The Hollow Tree, and Dutch Children.

STAGE PLAYS IN THE HALLS.

The Theatrical Managers' Association were complainants in a case heard on Tuesday before Mr. Plowden, at Marylebone, in which the London Theatres of Varieties, Ltd., Randvoll House, 39, Charing Cross-road, were summoned as the owners and occupiers of the Kilburn Empire for keeping the place for the public performance of stage plays without the authority of letters patent or the licence of the Lord Chamberlain, or the London County Council. Mr. Bodkin, barrister, prosecuted; Mr. Taylor Parkes, solicitor, defended.

A plea of guilty having been entered, Mr. Bodkin submitted that the breach of the Act of Parliament was a real, serious, and substantial one. The play presented was founded on the story of Dick Whittington; it contained eleven scenes, with twelve speaking parts. About thirty supers were engaged, and it took two hours to perform. The programme of the performance, however, was a most disingenuous document. To the ordinary observer it contained the ordinary variety items that one expected to see at a music-hall; but in point of fact they were mere items in the representation of a single drama which occupied two hours, and was presented twice each night. This, he contended, was contrary to the Act of Parliament, and was also in defiance of the explicit agreement come to in 1906 between the theatrical managers and a great number of music hall proprietors, including the managing director of the defendant company.

Mr. Plowden asked if counsel suggested there was any serious competition with the theatrical world in the production of such a piece.

"Certainly," said Mr. Bodkin.

Mr. Parkes urged, in extenuation, that the defendant company had no intention of committing a breach of the law, or of going outside the agreement come to. They thought that by splitting up the scenes of the play into separate items they would not be offending against either.

Mr. Plowden was at a loss to understand why the company should have been so stupid as to leave the beaten track that they were allowed to follow. He did not suppose, however, that any theatre had been injured the least in the world by the introduction of the piece complained of. The proper penalty under the circumstances was £5 a day for six days—a total of £30.

The relay teams also number ten, and as these and other non-handicap events are open until to-day additions may be made to this list.

A MEETING of the Sports Committee will be held on Monday at 5.30 to complete the arrangements, and to consider the objections received to one or two entries. The prizes will be exhibited by Messrs. C. H. Fox, Ltd., 27, Wellington-street, Strand, on Tuesday morning next.

THE Sunday Defence Committee have decided to hold a meeting on Friday, July 22, from one to three o'clock (probably in a West-End Theatre) for the purpose of considering the Sunday entertainment question in its new aspect, arising out of the decision of Mr. Cecil Chapman and the proceedings initiated by the Cinematograph Defence League in convening a meeting of the managers' and proprietors' Associations to consider the opening on Sundays of all kinds of theatres.

MR. RAMSAY MACDONALD, M.P., will preside, and representatives of various societies will be asked to speak, including many of the honorary vice-presidents of the Sunday Defence Committee. Actors, variety artists, musicians, and employees are urged, in their own interests, to attend this meeting and support the following resolution:—"That, in order to avert the imposition of a seven days' working week upon actors, artists, musicians, and employees, this meeting declares it to be imperative that the licence of any place licensed for public amusement should prohibit the opening of such premises on Sunday by way of trade or personal gain."

MR. W. H. CLEMART, chairman of the V.A.F. and the Sunday Defence Committee, will propose this resolution. Members of the Variety Artists' Federation, the Actors' Association, the Amalgamated Musicians' Union, and the National Association of Theatrical Employees, will be admitted on showing their card of membership. Tickets will be obtainable from the hon. secretary, Wm. Johnson, at 29, Wellington-street, W.C.

SPECIAL NOTE.—NO DEPUTIES WILL BE ACCEPTED AT REHEARSALS.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

RE APPLICATIONS FOR ENGAGEMENTS.—All applications by either Artists or their Agents must be made to the Head Office. Lowest terms must be stated, and distinction made between salaries required for larger and smaller towns. Vacant dates should be stated. If a list of existing bookings be sent, it will render selection easier. Artists employing agents should accredit one only at one time, as the friction arising when several Agents are employed at the same time, all expecting the one booking to go through each of them, often renders it expedient to avoid that booking altogether rather than give undeserved offence to several Agents. New Acts seeking Engagements, or turns not rebooked (possibly because they have played a series of dates without introducing new business), will facilitate matters by having their acts seen by our Districts Managers. Their Districts and Postal Addresses are as follow :—

EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, NEWCASTLE, and DISTRICT.—MR. S. GETHING, Empire Theatre, Glasgow.
LEEDS, SHEFFIELD, HULL, BRADFORD, and DISTRICT.—MR. PERCIVAL CRAIG, Empire Theatre, Bradford.
LIVERPOOL, MANCHESTER, and DISTRICT.—MR. HORACE COLE, The Empire, Liverpool.
SOUTH WALES DISTRICT.—MR. ALBERT MITCHELL, Empire Theatre, Cardiff.
TOURS COMMITTEE.—LLEWELLYN JOHNS and DISTRICT MANAGERS.
EMPIRE THEATRE, SOUTH SHIELDS.—Artists and Agents wishing to submit TRIALS for their Acts in the North, should apply to the Manager, as Matinées are held every Wednesday for that purpose.

N.B.—MR. OSWALD STOLL or MR. FRANK ALLEN can be seen by appointment on all matters arising out of the above, and for the discussion of entirely new Numbers.

All Artists or Agents who communicate with our District Representatives must have made definite applications, in accordance with above directions, to the Head Office, at the same time, or just previously. Artists and Agents are requested to note that the Standard Theatre, Shoreditch, and the Terriss Theatre, Rotherhithe, come within the areas absolutely barred by us. Artists and Agents are also requested to note that the Hippodrome, Aston, Birmingham, comes within the area absolutely barred by the Grand Theatre and Empire Palace, Birmingham.

INSTRUCTIONS TO ARTISTS.—Artists must have at least Fourteen Band Parts for English Orchestrations, and Seventeen Band Parts for Foreign Orchestrations. Matter of Bill, Blocks, and Specimens of Pictorials FOR THE ABOVE THEATRES must be sent to Co-operative Offices, at above address, THREE WEEKS before Opening, failing which Artists will run the risk of having their Engagements cancelled. It is important that separate bill matter, blocks, pictorials, &c., for Dublin, Belfast, and South Shields, be sent direct to Mr. Frank Allen at the Co-operative Offices. IMPORTANT.—Artists must forward Copies of Songs to the STAGE DEPARTMENT, ABOVE ADDRESS, TWO WEEKS previous to opening, with Assignments for same, which will be returned. Artists are requested to note carefully that the clause in their contracts relating to rehearsals will in future be strictly enforced. Artists' Scenery, Properties, &c., MUST be fireproofed in accordance with the regulations of the Licensing Authorities. ARTISTS WILL CLEARLY UNDERSTAND THAT THEIR BUSINESS MUST BE FREE FROM ALL VULGARITY.

No order or contract for goods or services must be accepted for any of the foregoing theatres except upon receipt of an Official Form, issued from the Co-operative Offices, London, and signed by either Mr. Oswald Stoll, Mr. Frank Allen, or the Chief Accountant, otherwise the Company concerned will not be responsible for same, and will refuse payment. In special cases, where goods are required at once, suppliers must look to the individual placing the order, who will be personally liable, unless an official confirmatory order, signed as above, is received within forty-eight hours. Invoices must be sent to the Theatre, but monthly statements should be sent to the Co-operative Offices. The individual Company on whose behalf orders are signed is solely responsible for payment. The Management will not hold themselves responsible in the event of loss of or damage to any MSS., Songs, &c., submitted for consideration.

MR. FRANK ALLEN
DESIRES TO EITHER
SELL OR LET ON AGREEMENT
THE BEAUTIFULLY-COMPACT DETACHED RESIDENCE, KNOWN AS WOODLAWN, KINGSTON HILL

(Held for an unexpired term of about sixty-three years, at a ground rent of £37 10s. per annum), containing seven bedrooms, dressing-room, two fitted bathrooms, with hot and cold water supplies, w.c., and lavatory, three capital reception rooms, excellent domestic offices on the ground floor, and spacious cellarage.

Detached stabling for three horses, double coach-house, and two rooms over, also motor garage, suitable for containing two large motor cars, and fitted up with bench and cemented pit.

Well timbered and beautiful grounds of about one acre. All new and up-to-date drainage and sanitation. A fine 18-hole golf course is being laid out opposite the house, in addition to which there are other three courses, two on Wimbledon Common (barely two miles away), Coombe Links (one mile), and the Wimbledon Park Golf Club (two-and-a-half miles).

The estimated rental value is £180 per annum, but an offer would be accepted of £140 per annum on a three years' agreement, or £130 per annum on a seven years' lease.

The ridiculously low price of £2,000 would be accepted. Mr. Allen's only reason for desiring to sell or let this beautiful residence (which combines the advantages of a town house with the pleasures of a country home), is owing to the recent marriage of his daughter.

Further particulars may be had on application, and the house can be viewed at any time by appointment.
Telephone No. 99 Kingston.

THE L.C.C. AND AMUSEMENTS.

The report of the Theatres and Music Halls Committee presented to the London County Council at its meeting contained the following paragraph; but when it was reached at 1.15 a.m. on Wednesday morning, the 22nd ult., opposition was raised, and the subject has accordingly to stand over:—

"The premises known as the London-bridge Picture Palace and Cinematograph Theatre, and situated at Nos. 116-118, Borough High-street, having been kept open for cinematograph entertainments on Sunday, Feb. 27, 1910, contrary to the conditions laid down by the Council on Feb. 15, 1910, we instructed the solicitor to take proceedings in respect of the breach of the conditions upon which the licence was granted. A summons was accordingly taken out against the Bermondsey Bioscope Company, Limited, and was heard before Mr. Cecil Chapman at the Tower-bridge Police-court on May 11, 1910. It was contended on behalf of the defendants that the Council had no power under the Cinematograph Act to impose the condition as to not opening the premises on Sundays, Good Friday, or Christmas Day. The magistrate, after hearing the case at considerable length, adjourned the matter until May 24 in order that he might look into the authorities cited and consider his decision. As a result, Mr. Chapman decided that the Council had acted ultra vires in making it a condition of the licence granted by them under the Cinematograph Act, 1909, that the premises should not be opened on Sundays, Good Friday, or Christmas Day, and he therefore dismissed the summons and awarded the defendants £5 5s. for costs. We have instructed the solicitor to take the necessary steps to get a case stated for the opinion of the High Court and to uphold the Council's interests in the matter."

The paragraph was revived in the Theatres and Music Halls Committee's report, submitted to the Council on Tuesday last. When the matter was again called on at midnight on Tuesday, opposition was again raised, and once more the matter stood over. The object of this opposition is to obtain a full discussion on the whole subject of the Council's powers in relation to cinematograph exhibitions.

The L.C.C. Theatres and Music Halls Committee reported at its meetings on Tuesday that it had considered drawings with regard to the undermentioned premises. The arrangements shown on the drawings appeared to be satisfactory, and the applicants have been informed that, subject to certain conditions being observed, the Council has no objection thereto:—

Chelsea Skating Rink, Church-street and King's-road, Chelsea—Seating.

Kensington Town Hall, Kensington High-street—Bazaar on June 15 and 16, 1910.

Olympia, Hammersmith—Business exhibition from Oct. 13 to 22, 1910.

Queen's Hall Skating Rink, High-street, Peckham—Adaptation as a cinematograph hall.

The County Council gave their approval to a drawing showing a proposal to extend the sides of the gallery at the Hammersmith Palace of Varieties. It is a condition that the gangways be arranged so that no seat is more than 10ft. from a gangway.

In November, 1905, the Empire Theatre of Varieties obtained the London County Council's permission to construct a staircase to lead from the box circle level to the grand foyer; but the work was not carried out. It is now proposed to proceed with the improvement, and the Council on Tuesday re-approved the old drawings.

MR. MARLOW'S ADVENTURES.

"One of my strangest Christmas experiences," writes Mr. George Marlow in an Australian paper, "was when I and others found ourselves, a day before Christmas, high and dry 120 miles from our next stand, where we were due to open on Boxing Night. The funds of the management, it was found, would pay the fares of the company, with the exception of one. It was suggested that one should get under the seat of the railway carriage. We all thought it a first-class idea, and echoed the clever remark. We wondered, however, who was to be the unfortunate. Anyhow, as I was the smallest in the crowd, the honour fell upon me. I travelled the 120 miles cooped up under the seat of the railway carriage, but I was allowed to come out occasionally, when I became cramped and almost crippled, to stretch my limbs. I do not want a similar experience again. A first-class sleeper is good enough for me any day.

"My next experience at the festive season was near Rockhampton (Q.). While waiting for the tender to take us up the river from the coastal steamer, a party of us went ashore at Sea Hill. One of the young fellows was connected with the shipping office, and he suggested us going to a pool where we could have a swim. We agreed, and were soon all on the spot, and jumping in one after the other. No sooner were we in, however, than there was emitted a howl from several, and we all made for the banks of the pool. We all thought sharks had got into the pool, but upon investigation we found that the tide had left a shoal of small bream. To show you how thick they were we went in immediately afterwards and simply scooped the fish out with our hands, and soon had over 200 of them on the ground. The fish darted in and out between our legs, giving us a funny feeling. However, it was fortunate we found the fish, for the tender was late, and no provision had been made for an extra meal, so we dined on these fish.

"The most unpleasant incident in connection with any Christmas occurred when I was with Mr. George Rignold's company. In Newcastle, one Boxing Night, we opened with Man to Man. We had taken on a property man at the last moment, and in the great train smash scene he placed on the stage blasting powder instead of gunpowder, for the explosion. You can imagine the row there was when that train smash happened. Nearly everyone on the stage was injured, and I was blown across the footlights, while I have still the marks on my legs where they were punctured with the powder. Fortunately the explosion did not extend to the audience. Realism on that occasion was brought to a fine pitch, for the train shot its occupants further than the management expected."

Of the pictures shown at the Alexandra Theatre this week, that entitled Capital and Labour seems to enjoy the greatest popularity. It is a story of an American strike, replete with dramatic incident, that appears to grip the attention of the audience and hold their interest throughout. Ascot Sunday at Boulter's Lot is an up-to-date film; and of the lighter pictures Mugwumps and the Baby finds the most favour. Miss Rale Brown provides the illustrated songs; and the farce is John Maddison Morton's well-tried favourite, Done on Both Sides, in which Mr. Mark Lester as the superannuated Excise-man Whiffles and Miss Nellie Dade as Mrs. Whiffles keep the ball merrily rolling, their support being excellent.

AMUSEMENTS IN AUSTRALIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

SYDNEY, MAY 18.—The Third Degree is a powerfully-written play, calculated largely to influence public opinion against the brutal methods of the American police in compelling confessions from innocent, as well as guilty, prisoners. Charles Klein has put the case with terrible force, and Mr. J. C. Williamson has provided a most efficient cast to interpret the story. The bullying of a semi-intoxicated soul-and-body-weary young man by a coarse, unscrupulous Chief of Police is capitally done by Mr. George Bryant. Mr. Bryant's loud, strident voice would terrify even a free man, and one can easily see how a captive, in his terror, could be dominated by it. Miss Katharine Grey makes the hit of her theatrical career as the younger Mrs. Howard Jeffries. Miss Grey is American, and as the ex-factory girl ex-waitress she lets us know it. No other accent, no other idioms could succeed in such case, and the audience sympathised, and laughed without stint. At every curtain fall cheers and flowers greeted the talented actresses. No less successful was Mr. Julius Knight, who acted the usually imperturbable lawyer, loyal to his rich client, the father of the supposed murderer, but yet fonder of justice. It was a careful study, and the people saw the painstaking art of the actor. Mr. Cyril Mackay played the younger Howard Jeffries well. His exhaustion while under the brutal domination of Captain Clinton was capitally simulated, and the senior Howard Jeffries could not have been entrusted to more careful hands than those of Mr. Winter Hall, who was adamant itself until the triumph of his daughter-in-law broke him down. The suicide and art swindler, Robert Underwood, had Mr. Sydney Sterling to do such a character justice, and he did it amply. Miss Ethel Warwick was the senior Mrs. Howard Jeffries, and in her scenes with Underwood and her young step-daughter she acquitted herself well. Dr. Bernstein, the brain specialist, is a short part, but Mr. Leslie Victor did all that was possible, as also did Mr. George Treloar as Brewster's comic butler. John Groom painted the scenery, and Mr. Julius Knight, assisted by Mr. Thos. E. Foster, produced the play.

THE Oscar Asche and Lily Brayton season closed last night at the Criterion, when Count Hannibal was performed for the last time. Next Saturday, the 21st, Mr. Matheson Lang and Miss Hutin Britton will produce Hall Caine's own play, Pete, with a specally-selected company.

"ALADDIN," at Her Majesty's, will take his departure after the 19th, and on the 21st The King of Cadonia will be revived by Mr. J. C. Williamson's Royal Comic Opera Company, with Miss Dorothy Court and Mr. Bert Gilbert in the leading rôles. The next Saturday, the 28th, will see The Dollar Princess produced, with Miss Grace Edmonds as prima donna.

THE Tivoli has a new-old attraction, for Miss Olive Lenton, after English experience and success, has returned to astonish her old friends by her clever work. The Howard Brothers, the Two Falcons, Fred Bluett, Alburton and Millar, the Two Bells, and the ever-welcome mimic, Fanny Powers, are amongst Mr. Harry Rickards' plenteous bill of fare. The National Amphitheatre, Anderson's Vaudeville at the Standard, West's Pictures at the Palace, Spencer's Theatrescope at the Lyceum, pictures at the Bijou, the Colonial Theatre, and Wirth's Circus are all doing well.

MRS. REBECCA TOLANO, widow of the old-time manager and lessee of the Victoria Theatre, and mother of the comedian, Joe Tolano (now a Bonifface), died on the 15th, at the ripe age of eighty-two.

MR. EDWARD FARLEY, principal operatic basso for many years, lies seriously ill as this leaves Sydney.

MISS GERTRUDE BOSWELL left for England on the 14th by the R.M.S. Orvieto. Her husband, Mr. G. H. Smith, remains to manage for the J. C. Williamson firm.

MELBOURNE, MAY 23.—PRINCESS'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. Huzh J. Ward; Representative, Mr. Walter Monk.—The Girl from Rector's is accepted as one of the brightest entertainments that Mr. Ward has yet staged in this city. On Saturday evening the house was filled to overflowing by an enthusiastic audience, and laughter reigned supreme. The costumes are quite a feature of the sparkling comedy. The dance in the third act by Misses Tilly Woodlock, Maud Chetwynd, and Florence Redfern was most successful; and the mercurial efforts of Mr. Ward, Miss Paiotta, and other artists were hailed with such marks of favour that a long run for the piece seems assured. Matinées are given every Wednesday.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Lessees, Messrs. Clyde Meynell and Rupert Clarke; Business-Manager, Mr. Arthur Levy.—The Arcadians is still proving a magnet of strong attractive powers. The audience on Saturday evening entirely filled the theatre, though the ninth week of the season has been entered upon. Mr. William Cromwell's comedy acting again caused a great deal of mirth. Mr. Tom Walls is encored nightly for singing his "motto" song. The whole entertainment bristles with mirth and jollity, while the music is inspiring and bright. The last three weeks of the season are announced.

KING'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. William Anderson; Business-Manager, Mr. Julius Grant.—The stirring Australian melodrama Thunderbolt was revived on Saturday evening in the presence of a packed house. Mr. George Cross gave a thoroughly satisfactory rendering of the Outlaw. As his wife Sunday Miss Eugenie Duggan has a comparatively small part, and acted throughout with her accustomed ability. Mr. Bert Bailey as a new chum, Jackeroo, kept the house in roars of laughter. Mr. Rutland Beckett acted effectively as the villain of the piece. The sprightly performance of Miss Fanny Erris as Willy McGuire soon found favour with the audience, and Miss Kathleen Lorimer contributed a clever sketch of a black gin. A word of praise is due to Miss Olive Wilton, who assumed the part of the Squatter's Daughter. Her acting in the scene where the coach was stuck up was very creditable, and she was restrained throughout. Mr. Edmund Duggan made an admirable Police Constable. Thunderbolt will run till further notice.

OPERA HOUSE.—Proprietor, Mr. Harry Rickards; Business-Manager, Mr. Frederic Aydon.—To an already strong bill several new artists were added on Saturday. Foremost among these must be mentioned Bonita (champion rifle shot) and Cleopatra (snake charmer). It is now some three years since these clever and popular artists last appeared in Melbourne, and they were accorded a warm reception from a large house. Bonita performed a number of astonishing feats with her rifle-shooting at all manner of targets, from a great variety of difficult positions. At the conclusion of her performance this clever little lady was recalled several times. Cleopatra showed to what perfection the training of reptiles can be brought. The ease with which this lady handles her "pets" was a source of astonishment to her audience. Cleopatra's turn is a novel and interesting one, and found great favour with her audience. Other artists appearing with success at present include the Two Bells, Lieut. Frank Travis, Bert Tyrrell, Lillie Langtry, Olga Grey, Clarence Tisdale, Alma Lydon, the Two Colliers, Billy Williams, and many more.

ONE of the finest variety entertainments ever given on the Melbourne stage took place last Tuesday afternoon at the King's Theatre (generously given free by Mr. Anderson), in aid of the Green Room Club, in the presence of a crowded and representative house. The amount realised is something like £200. The direct object of the afternoon's receipts is to better the financial position of the institution, and to establish a sick and benefit fund for its members.

PROVINCIAL THEATRICALS

ACCRINGTON.—PRINCE'S THEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. J. B. Ormerod; Acting-Manager, Mr. J. E. Barnes.—Closed for the usual summer vacation.

NEW HIPPODROME.—Proprietors, The Accrington Hippodrome Co.; Resident-Manager, Mr. Walter Mould.—The chief item in this week's programme is the sketch The Gay Countess, cleverly interpreted by Mr. Henry Kemble's company. The Cormans, juveniles, in their original scena The Waif, receive a most cordial greeting; and Vera Mayne, vocal comedienne, creates an excellent impression; Sibb and Sibb submit a daring and refined trapeze performance, which is remarkably clever; Grahame and Harrington, in an interesting episode, prove entertaining; and Fayre and Manning are a pair of amusing comedians. The Godfreys, musicians and comedians, are well received; and the films displayed on the Bioscope are up to the usual standard.

ALDERSHOT.—ROYAL.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Clarence Sounes; Resident-Manager, Mr. Jack Gladwin.—The Girl from Kay's forms a change from the usual variety work, and although it has been curtailed to fit the two-houses-a-night system, the musical play in question does not appear to have suffered materially, and full houses are the order. Miss Florrie Millington is very successful with her interpretation of the title-rôle; whilst Mr. J. W. Hooper, as Max Hoggenheimer, contrives to keep the audience in a merry mood with the unconventional comedy associated with that part. Miss Rosie Burnett's is a capital impersonation of Nora Chalmers; and Miss Dorothy King proves to be a lively maid, Ellen; whilst Miss May Wiltshire is acceptable as Mrs. Chalmers; Mr. Harold Perry gives a capital portrayal of Harry Gordon; Mr. Charles Leverton (who is also stage-manager) as the Hon. Fitz-Thistle, meets all requirements; whilst Messrs. B. H. Heron (Joseph), Richard Andean (Theodore), Geo. H. Arthur (Chalmers), Jameson Thomas (Archie), Lewis Heron (Frank), and Walter H. Pink (Pepper), are all well placed.

ASHINGTON.—PAVILION PALACE.—Proprietors, Messrs. McGraw and Wealleans; Manager, Mr. Joe Curry.—Mr. Harry Harvey is delighting audiences with his songs and patter; the Bouncing Peps are smart, and their performing dog "Prince" particularly well trained; a capital selection of pictures is provided.

BUFFALO PALACE.—Proprietors, Messrs. J. and E. Lamb; Manager, Mr. W. P. Carr.—Mr. J. C. Scatter is proving a popular Tyneside comedian; and Geo. Bernard is a clever actor-vocalist. There is the usual array of first-class films.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE. — THEATRE ROYAL.—Sole Owner and Manager, Mr Chas. Revill; Acting-Manager, Mr. Chas. Revill, jun.—Mr. Wilson Howard's dramatic company is here in Mr. Fred Jarman's Under the Iron Heel. Miss Carlotta Anson's impersonation of Germainie is striking and impressive; Father Mirbleau, in the hands of Mr. John Talford, is also a personage which commands attention; Mr. Douglas B. Watson as Rene de Maupassant maintains military firmness; Mr. J. W. Richards as Otto Marx is equally stern; and Mr. Dennis Clyde, Mr. Gerald Smythe, and Mr. R. Merring realise respectively the essential differences in nationality and character of a Bavarian officer, a Franc-tireur, and Colonel of the Prussians.

EMPIRE HIPPODROME.—Proprietors, Messrs. W. H. Broadhead and Son; Acting-Manager, Mr. W. Leech; Assistant-Manager, Mr. Jesse Burslem.—Heading the programme here is Mr. W. C. Fields, silent humorist, an artist of rare talent. Golden and Chance have a novel and eccentric act; Ida Dorrie is a chic comedienne; the two Brilliants are expert lady xylophonists; and vocalism of a refined order is supplied by Robb Rossi, the Manx tenor. Two comedians of dissimilar ability and humour are seen in S. W. Wyndham, singing comedian, and Jack McNeill, an expert dancer; the popular duettists, Florence and Rose Showell, win applause for tuneful harmony; and the Bioscope plays a not unimportant part in the programme.

ATTERCLIFFE. — THEATRE ROYAL, LTD.—Managing-Director, Mr. Frank Macnaghten; Manageress, Miss Ethel J. Hope.—A diversified picture programme embraces several of more than usual interest. The Deserter is a stirring drama, The Heart of an Outlaw is full of excitement, Linda of Chamouny a fine historical drama, A Canadian Summer Resort gives some charming scenery, The Salt Industry is most instructive, humour is also well represented. Vaudeville items are given by Miss Ray Kent, chorus comedienne; and Mr. Rudge Whitworth, entertainer.

PICTURE PALACE.—Lessee, Mr. Matt Raymond; Resident-Manager, Mr. Bert Dent.—This popular place of amusement is crowded nightly, and the programmes submitted are up to date. The leading picture this week is Capital and Labour, which deals with incidents of a strike, and The Gold Seekers is another exciting series. A pleasurable turn is introduced by Day and Deen, comedians; and the Scarlet Band, under Mr. W. A. Guest's direction, render appropriate selections.

BARNSLEY.—EMPIRE.—Managing-Director, Mr. Will Smithson; Acting-Manager, Mr. Richard Hutton.—The excellent fare provided at this popular house is drawing fine business. Paul Corris heads the bill with a distictly novel balancing and equilibristic act of the herculean order; Aggie Nolan pleases with her smart dancing; vocalism of a high order is provided by Andrews and Thomson; a child artist of much promise is Merry Marjorie Lawrence; Ormond Penstone submits some latter-day magic; Viviana and company in The Toy Shop provide a pantomimical turn of merit; and Al and Lal in a ventriloquial pot-pourri act and Ada Gatley on the slack wire are other turns in a good all-round programme. Weisker's pictures are much appreciated.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS. — ROYALTY THEATRE AND OPERA HOUSE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Hugh Robertson; Resident-Manager, Mr. George Stone.—Mr. Tom Watts' company in East Lynne is here. Mr. Watts himself plays Lord Mounteevern with success; Miss Ida Heron is a sympathetic Lady Isabel; Mr. Frank Beresford is a manly Archibald Carlyle; Miss Alice Seymour a charming Barbara Hare; Mr. W. F. Mansfield an excellent Francis Levison; and Mr. Jerrold Manville a good Justice Hare.

HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessees and Managers, Mr. and Mrs. Calvert Routledge.—The Drolls are here under the direction of Messrs. Stewart and Lorraine in a diverting entertainment.

TIVOLI.—Lessee, Signor R. Pepi; Acting-Manager, Mr. Henry Wood.—At the top of the bill here appear the George French troupe of trick cyclists with a smart performance; quite a unique comedy acrobatic performance is given by the Three Gelins; the Snow Family are amusing in a skating carnival; Madge Goodall is pleasing in songs and dance; W. E. Sant makes a hit with his songs; Cash and Clair are exceedingly capable dancers; Will McIvor has a capital voice; and Vernon's Bioscope concludes.

BATH. — PALACE THEATRE. — Proprietor, Mr. Frank Macnaghten; Manager, Mr. Chas. Schuberth.—Burt Shepard is heading a good all-round company this week with "Potted Plays and Poetry" at the piano; Lauri Wylie once again scores a success with his Mimicking Mannikins; the Two Lees present a clever instrumental musical act; the Seddons, the lady juggler and comic waiter, are old friends who are always welcome; Florence Creagh and Dick Cruikshanks in a dramatic duologue, Her Return, appeal by their pathetic intensity; George Belrose and Maude De Velin, duettists, are well received; and Bert Crosbie, a comedian and dancer, also appears.

SYDNEY GARDENS.—One of the most original costume concert parties on tour are the Gay Birds, who have, unfortunately, not been favoured with suitable weather for outdoor entertainments during their first visit to Bath.

BELFAST. — THEATRE ROYAL.—Managing-Director, Mr. Fred W. Warden; Acting-Manager, Mr. W. A. Salmond.—Messrs. John Power and Robert Faulkner's company opened here on Monday with the domestic drama For Wife and Home. Mr. Robert Faulkner appears with success in the rôle of Roland St. Pierre. Miss Marion Ryder was thoroughly convincing as Rosette Legrand; Mr. Wilton Llewellyn was admirable as Henri St. Pierre; and Miss Georgina Clifford appeared to advantage as Celeste Legrand. Mr. Edward De Vere was entirely satisfactory as the Abbe La Touche; and the rôle of Jean Legrand was efficiently portrayed by Mr. Frederick Lisle; Mr. Edwin Maydew as the mesmerist Gaspard le Farge furnished an excellent impersonation; and a capital interpretation of Acard Picole was furnished by Mr. Bruce Williams. Miss Alice Bradshaw ably sustains the rôle of Miladi St. Pierre; and other rôles were interpreted by Miss Florrie Soroby, Miss Nina Harding, and Messrs. Clifford Locke, H. Payne, and Stanley Hobane.

ROYAL HIPPODROME.—Managing-Director, Mr. Fred Willmott; Resident-Manager, Mr. Henry T. Downs.—A big attraction is provided by the Frank L. Gregory Troupe, who have been accorded a terrific reception for their clever feats of hoop-rolling and juggling; El Tampico's Mexican Troubadours furnish a musical entertainment of excellence. Harrigan and Holt are appearing in their funny act The Inspector and the Policeman; Miss Maude Beaumont is a charming comedienne; and Duncan and Godfrey appear with their usual success in their funny duologue The Coster's Courtship. Miss Elsie Malpas is a wonderful child mimic, and the Three Welsh Girls delight with their vocal items. Also appearing are Sterling and Love in Discord and Harmony; Mr. Joe Archer, comedian; and the Hipposcope.

EMPIRE THEATRE OF VARIETIES, LTD.—General-Manager, Mr. Frank Allen; Acting-Manager, Mr. A. C. Laidler.—The star here is Mr. Charles T. Aldrich, and his success on Monday was certainly gratifying. An old favourite, Mr. J. H. Milburn, has been heartily welcomed. The Rawsons (Master Jack and Miss Maggie) are an acquisition to the programme, and the clever trick and comedy cyclists Maxey and Pete have been enthusiastically received. Miss Jennie Hartley is a most capable comedienne, and the return of Mr. Barney Stuart, the clever comedian and entertainer, has been hailed with pleasure. Also appearing are Miss Kathleen Gray, comedienne, and the Bioscope.

NEW ALHAMBRA THEATRE.—General-Manager, Mr. Will White.—By request the series of pictures representing the Funeral of the late King Edward VII. are reproduced here, and among others presented may be mentioned The Twisted Trail, An Eye for an Eye, &c. The vaudeville element is sustained by Professor Norton, a clever magician, whose feats are really marvellous, and Mr. Jim Brady, a funny comique.

ST. GEORGE'S HALL.—General-Manager, Mr. Herbert Rogers.—Some interesting films are being shown here, including Scenes in the Reign of King Edward VII., King Edward's Funeral, &c. Miss Anna Hope, a talented contralto, is paying a return visit.

BILSTON.—ROYAL AND HIPPODROME. — Lessee, Mr. Edwin C. Jazon; Resident-Manager, Mr. W. J. Tunstall.—This week's programme includes the Two Manites, comedy club jugglers; Tom N. Mills, Australian patter comedian; and Nellie Langtry, Scottish contralto vocalist, in addition to the pictures projected by the Hippograph.

BIRKENHEAD.—NEW THEATRE ROYAL.—Sole Lessee, Mr. W. W. Kelly; Acting-Manager, Mr. Herbert M. King.—Mr. Graham Arthur's company in The Mockery of Marriage are well received. Miss Mabel Elliott enacts the part of Alva Kenyon with much skill; Mr. Arthur gives a forcible delineation of the scoundrelly Dick Kenyon; and Ned Stanley is ably impersonated by Mr. Ernest Wingfield. The cast generally is most efficient, and the piece is thoroughly enjoyed twice nightly.

ARGYLE THEATRE OF VARIETIES.—Sole Proprietor and Manager, Mr. D. J. Clarke; Acting-Manager, Mr. J. Keating.—A good all-round combination comprises Mr. Syd Walker, a popular and resourceful comedian; the Three Comedy Chanters, in an excellent vocal entertainment; Pipifax and Paulo, amusing acrobatic comedians; Miss Tiny Arnold, a clever comedienne; the Lester Brothers, dancers of exceptional ability; Mr. Charles Penrose, a versatile artist; the Eight College Girls, song and dance entertainers; Mr. Frank H. Fox, an amusing comedian; and Brown's Royal Bioscope.

THE DRAMA IN PARIS.

PARIS, THURSDAY, June 23.—With the hot weather, Paris is undergoing its usual transformation. The theatres are beginning to close their doors, and the Parisian is packing his trunks to run away from the capital the moment the dreaded summer tourists put in their appearance, creatures who arrive in shoals, and during two months take possession of our city. For years you have had your favourite corner in the restaurant where you lunch every day. Jules, the old waiter, does not even reserve it, for the other guests respect it, like you respect their claims. But when the month of July approaches there is no more comfort for you in Paris. You will find your little corner taken, and no room at any other table. The place has become a pandemonium. Jules is gone. He has fled. So have the other waiters, and their places have been taken by a set of men, none of whom seem to have been honestly begotten, and who are visible only during the summer months.

IN those theatres that remain open throughout the year you will notice the same phenomenon. Jules, who considers himself a "star" in the establishment that employs him, has, as I told you, run away. In the playhouses the "stars" have followed Jules' example, and in their stead we get another set of artists, whose mission is to entertain the foreign invader. That foreign invader has no reason to complain as regards the bill of fare offered him, for when he reads the playbill he sees that the management has retained the "successes" of the year; and as he ignores that the original cast is miles away from Paris, and that Chantecler, Miquette et sa Mère, and other works are interpreted by under-studies, he is delighted with his evening, especially as he has only paid understudy prices.

SOMETIMES the invader is observant, and then one can assist at some queer scenes. "Why, Jennie," I heard a gentleman, who was sitting in the stalls and had sported a green tie and a golf cap, say to his companion, "I always thought French people were so particular in their theatres. And there are two French ladies over yonder sucking oranges! . . . But, s'help me! . . . Why, it's Mrs. Nash from Old Ford and her daughter! Good evening, Mrs. Nash!" And Mrs. Nash, who was about five rows in front, returned the salute in a loud voice.

THE hot weather also causes people to do foolish things, and get themselves into trouble with the authorities. This, Mlle. Lucette de Landy, a pretty little music-hall singer, found out at her cost. The young lady had been celebrating her birthday. After a sumptuous supper, where much champagne had been drunk, the divette went into her bedroom and put on the costume of a Paris street boy, in which she will soon appear in a revue. Somebody then suggested that they should all go into the street And they not only went there en masse, but, headed by Mlle. Lucette, who sang at the top of her voice, they danced round the venerable Arc de Triomphe. Then came the catastrophe, in the form of a policeman, who took down the lady's name, after which she was hauled before an unfeeling magistrate, who sentenced her to 15 francs fine and one day's imprisonment. Mlle. Lucette did not mind the fine, but the idea of a cold cell and wet straw made her shudder. So she appealed against the sentence, and, like Phyrne, pleaded her own case. But, whereas the Greek courtesan appeared before her judges "mit nothings on"—as the Germans call it—Mlle. Lucette wore a dark costume and a hat befitting the occasion. She, moreover, promised never to dance and sing round the Arc de Triomphe again, whereupon the Court struck out the day's imprisonment, but insisted on the fine being paid.

FEW men in the theatrical world have had so many lawsuits within the last two years than MM. Messager and Broussan, managers of our Opéra. But, be it said to their credit, in nearly all cases they came off victorious. This week it was M. Vanara dancer and ballet master of the Opéra, who brought an action against them, claiming damages for wrongful dismissal. The plaintiff had been engaged as far back as 1900 by the late manager, M. Gailhard, at a salary of £160, which was subsequently doubled on his being appointed ballet master. When, however, MM. Messager and Broussan took over the managership they decided that they would dispense with M. Vanara's services, and dismissed him. By the terms of his contract plaintiff contended that his engagement held good for the present year; and he therefore sued for arrears of salary and damages for breach of contract. The Court, however, decided against him, for they held that his contract was only binding during M. Gailhard's term of office.

"LES LIMITES DU CŒUR" is the title of a one-act comedy by M. André Beaunier, brought out at the Comédie-Française, and deals with the breaking off of a liaison between the lovers. There is nothing tragic in this rupture. Neither Henri nor Gladys had the remotest idea that they had ceased to care for one another until an unforeseen incident opened their eyes to that fact. In Paris they were delightfully happy, so happy that Henri suddenly had the idea of taking Gladys to Italy, where, he felt sure, greater bliss would await them. As it turned out, the experiment proved a failure. The first days they spent near the Lake of Como were exquisite. They went for long excursions, admired the beautiful sites, and returned happy and tired. After a while the beauties of nature began to grow insipid, and the solitude weighed upon them. Henri was not aware of it, but his companion began to yawn, and told him plainly that she would like to return to Paris. Henri jumped at the idea. It then dawned upon them that not only Italy but their attachment had become boring. The clever psychological study met with an excellent reception.

MME. SARAH-BERNHARDT has had the misfortune of losing her daughter-in-law, the wife of her son, Maurice Bernhardt. Mme. Maurice Bernhardt, who died in her forty-sixth year, was a Princesse Jablonowska, and I remember her, a charming young girl, when she went to M. Julian's painting academy. It was there that M. Maurice Bernhardt made her acquaintance. She leaves two daughters, one a girl of fourteen, and another married some time ago to M. Edgar Gross. Great sympathy is felt for Mme. Sarah, who was very fond of the departed lady. As a sign of mourning the Sarah-Bernhardt Theatre will remain closed to-night.

MM. GHEUSI AND MIRANNE have read to the artists of the Opéra the libretto of their lyric play, Le Miracle, for which M. Georges Hue has written the music. The scene is laid in a fortified town in Burgundy, in the fifteenth century, besieged by a horde of Italian freebooters. The cast will comprise MM. Muratore, Delmas, Dangès, Teissié, Cerdan, and Mmes. Chenal, Bailac, Courbière, and Goulancourt. The work is to be produced in the course of the next season.

PARIS THURSDAY, June 30.—A lawsuit has been brought by Mlle. Retoré against the Moulin Rouge management. This lady appeared there in La Revue Amoureuse, and her rôle was peculiar, yet very attractive in so far as she performed a Hindu dance with a live snake. It was fraught with danger, for on March 9, as she took up the reptile to start her dance, it bit her in the hand. What made the case particularly interesting was the fact that Mlle. Retoré at first danced with her own serpent, of which she felt sure. Unfortunately her pet died, whereupon she asked M. Ruez, the Moulin Rouge manager, to let her dance with an indiarubber snake. M. Ruez would not consent to this, but offered to share expenses with the artist if she would buy another snake. She then applied to the Zoological Gardens here, who supplied her with the serpent that bit her. Mlle. Retoré asked for damages in virtue of the new act, which renders employers responsible for accidents befalling their employees. The management replied that the lady was not an employee in the sense held by the law, but the Court found for Mlle. Retoré, to whom they awarded £40 damages in addition to the amount claimed by her for salary.

In lawsuit number 2 Mlle. Yrven, the pretty actress from the Palais Royal, asked £2,400 damages from the owners of the auto-taxi that conducted her one night to the Variétiés. The chauffeur, having taken the paint off a few vehicles that came his way, finally ran into an omnibus. His car was smashed, and Mlle Yrven's face was cut by the broken glass. Her dress, moreover, was spoiled by the accident, a dress that had cost the trifle of £240. Poor Mlle. Yrven received very little in the way of damages—only £160; but her chauffeur came in for his share. He was awarded eight days' imprisonment and was fined £4.

In lawsuit number 3 the important question had to be settled whether in the month of July, in the good year 1909, Mlle. Delmarès was afflicted with toothache! This young lady—who, as everybody knows, is a music-hall singer—had been engaged at Marigny for 1909 and 1910. Last year, however, she was frequently absent—so frequently that the Marigny management looked upon her as a chronic absentee, and sued her for £200, forfeit money. The lady pleads force majeure, which showed itself in the shape of a terrible toothache, necessitating the intervention of several dentists. And she claims £200 from the Marigny Theatre for not having asked her to attend the rehearsals in 1910. The Court will give judgment in a week.

Case number 4. Mlle. Arina Defma, a Roumanian singer and dancer, was summoned by her chauffeur for having given him two black eyes. The fair accused did not deny the assault, but said that she punished the man because, whilst at table, he had pinched her mother. "Do you, and your mother, and your chauffeur, all dine at the same table?" gasped the worthy magistrate. "Yes," replied Mlle. Defma, "and, as a rule, he behaves all right. I must say, mother rather aggravated him that day, and he is a young man of excellent family." "Get out!" thundered the magistrate, "you, your mother, and your young man of good family, and don't let me see you here again."

At the little Théâtre Grévin Le Système Ribadier, the amusing comedy by MM. Georges Feydeau and Maurice Hennequin, has met with an excellent reception. The plot is very simple. Angèle Ribadier has married twice. Her first husband was unfaithful to her, a fact of which she only became aware after that gentleman's death. The result is that this man's successor, Ribadier, has rather a difficult time, inasmuch as his wife, now very suspicious, keps a watchful eye on him. For all that, he follows his predecessor's example, and deceives Angèle whenever he can To prevent her from following him, he sends her into a magnetic sleep, and wakes on his return from his escapades. He is, however, stupid enough to impart his secret to Thomereux, one of Angèle's admirers. Thomereux then calls on Angèle and acquaints her with all Ribadier's tricks. Angèle, to punish her husband, makes him believe that during her magnetic sleep somebody has taken advantage of her, and it is only on Ribadier repenting and promising to turn over a new leaf that his wife dispels his fears.

At the Opéra the "Russian Season" has been brought to a close with a fine performance of L'Oiseau Bleu, a Russian tale. Young Ivan Tsarevitch sees a magnificent bird. He follows it and pulls out a feather from his tail. In doing so he has ventured on the domain of the sorcerer Kostchei, who lays hold of him and wants to change him into a stone statue. But it turns out that the feather from the bird's tail is a talisman and that the bird is a fairy. Thanks to this talisman the princesses and knights whom the sorcerer had imprisoned are set free, and in the enchanted gardens pluck the golden apples that give eternal happiness. To this old Russian tale M. Stravinsky has written some delightful music, which, however, shows that the composer has been strongly influenced by Debussy, a fate he shares with many others.

GARRICK AND THE MEMORIAL THEATRE.

"What would Garrick say," writes Louise Kenny in the Irish Independent, "of the projected Shakespeare Memorial Theatre in London—a project national so far as England is concerned, and cosmopolitan to the rest of the world? Well, I think this theatre in the air has a fighting chance of materialising, as I'm full sure Garrick would pat it on the portico and bow in the first night's audience, if we could only seem him. There were witty, therefore thoughtful, speeches at the meeting just held in Trinity College to enlist Irish sympathy in this cause, and the assemblage would have been distinguished in any case under the presidency of the most graceful Shakespearean exponent the cause has known, but, all the while, one thought of Garrick just as much as of Shakespeare.

"It was Garrick who set the fashion of these Shakespeare Memorials. The little man his numerous friends called the great little man, and his numerous enemies viewed as the little great man, tip-tilted an assertive chin against great thundering John Milton himself and his sense of the uselessness of piled stones to the memory of a man whose own works are an eternal edification. The Gallic and Irish passion for buildings into which you can put a brick yourself—or throw a brick at the head of the master-builder—broke out in Garrick. Even if you build without self-consciously edifying intent, and still leave behind you something good to look at and know one's way about in, that is something done and worth doing. It made Paris a most stimulating earthly Paradise to a very agreeable order of intellects, and at a turn-the corner of the eighteenth century it got a chance here in our own city which leaves the present Dublin a city of an unreplaced past.

"And as for David Garrick, do you know why he was the most notable actor who ever appeared on the English stage, and why some indefinable elixir of mentality ran so lively through all his blood? It was because he was not really an Englishman, though born in England. And the Frenchman's son had a mother who was full-blooded Irish, though born in England—Arabella Clough, the parson's daughter and wife of Peter Garric, son of old David de la Garrique, the Huguenot refugee. Not merely the mind, but the nature to make out his case, broke out in young David Garrick when he turned away from the wine trade and merchandising of commodities, and raised into a liberal art his calling whose pursuers were branded by the majesty of the law as rogues and vagabonds, and—what was worse—eyed by the public as poor devils, anyhow."

BERLIN, THURSDAY, June 23.—This little work has been drawn by the composer from a story by the late Ernst von Wildenbruch. It is not of great importance as an opera, but serves to show Herr Gura's good intentions in the way of deviating from the beaten track. Whether it would not have been better to have saved the cast the trouble of rehearsing the novelty is, however, a question. The reception was cordially respectful, and that was all. The music is mediocre, and is written round an episode—which is very readable, coming from the pen of a writer like Wildenbruch—in the Franco-German war. It treats of the love of a young German for a girl who saves his life, the French peasant Reine, which can, in the nature of things, only have a tragic ending. The plot appears in the libretto to be partly brutal, partly sentimental; the book is, in fact, very poor, and the music is in keping. On the other hand, the interpretation was admirable, and worthy of a better cause. Frau Gura-Hummel—wife of the director of the Gura Opera, and daughter of the Berlin composer, Ferdinand Hummel—gave a very good account of Reine, and Herr Hochheimer's pleasing tenor was heard to advantage in the rôle of Wilhelm. The opera was followed by a capital performance of Der verlorene Sohn (l'enfant prodigue), with Herr and Frau Gura as Pierrot, senior and junior. The audience obviously enjoyed the pantomime better than the preceding work.

THE opening night of the Gura Opera season was dedicated to Wagner. Die Meistersinger was in the bill with a thoroughly efficient cast. The fine tenor of Herr Miller from the Imperial Opera, Vienna, was heard to best advantage in the part of Stoltzing, and Frau Gura-Hummel's rendering of Eva is well known and appreciated here. Perhaps the best impersonation was the Hans Sachs of Herr Feinhals, from the Munich Royal Opera; the artist was in capital voice, and the audience applauded him enthusiastically. The chorus and orchestra, under the skilful leadership of Kapellmeister Stransky were, on the whole, satisfactory. Less successful was the performance of Lohengrin on Friday; the cast was uneven, and several unfortunate episodes marred the evening. Herr Stransky was unable to conduct on account of sudden indisposition, and his substitute was far less experienced. At the close of the second act the manager came forward saying the impersonator of Telramund was taken ill, and could not continue. Herr Gura himself filled the breach, and creditably, too, but the performance suffered on the whole. The name-part was in the hands of the Dresden artist, Herr Boettger, who is the happy possessor of a pleasing tenor and good "school." The rôle of Elsa was given by Fräulein Petzl in artistic and sympathetic style. To-night The Walküre is in the bill, with Herr Miller as Siegmund and Herr van Rooy in the part of Wotan.

A WILDLY-IMPOSSIBLE farce was produced with favourable results at the Rose Theatre last week. The title is the somewhat clumsy one of Die Wach und Schliessgesellschaft, meaning the night watchman's company, and the collaborators are Herren Richard Mainz and Franz Winter. To detail the piece, which is in three acts, would be a task beyond my powers. The characters are all well known to theatre-goers; they include the energetic mother-in-law, her own weak and amorously-inclined spouse, the son-in-law who deceives his wife and is found out, and, on expressing penitence, is forgiven. It is the customary cast in a would-be "piquant" farce. All the persons of the play meet at the rendezvous intended only for one pair of lovers, and this creates the usual number of complications. In spite of the poorness of the plot, there is plenty to laugh at in the smart dialogue, and the audience enjoyed themselves, calling the authors before the curtain and applauding vigorously.

SIEGFRIED WAGNER is expected here to superintend rehearsals of his new opera Der Kobald, which is to be produced at Gura Opera in a short time. The composer will himself conduct.

BERLIN, THURSDAY, June 30.—This remarkable pot-pourri does not belong, it is hardly necessary to say, to the regular bill of the Komische Oper. The boards are now occupied by the company of Herr Linsemann from Vienna, and there is nothing good to be said about the "guests." The manager understands the uselessness of putting anything very serious on during the dog-days, but something a little less confused would have served his purpose just as well. Herr Max Schönau has translated the farce very freely and drastically, pandering to popular Berlin taste as it is in the holidays, and the result is that the audience laughed incessantly, very often without knowing why. The action centres itself in a lieutenant who is sentenced to a week's arrest just after his wedding. An idiotic lawyer pretends to be the lieutenant for some reason best known to himself, and out of these two facts the authors spin a web of utterly impossible complications, misunderstandings, and situations. The colonel of the regiment is a good-natured, easy-going ass—to use a classical expression—and is duped by his subordinates accordingly. Among all the persons of this astounding play there is not a single one who would not be qualified for admittance in the county asylum. Herr Poldi Deutsch—one of the cleverest low comedians extant—made all the running in the part of the silly old colonel; his very stupidity created roars of laughter, and the audience would not be satisfied until they had called him before the curtain times innumerable. An awkward incident in connection with this piece occurred before the second performance. A large and expectant audience arrived at the theatre to find the doors closed; the crowd grew in size and impatience, until the police sent them home again, saying the performance would not take place that night. Indignant, but obedient, as becomes a Prussian crowd, the disappointed ones returned the way they came. An explanation has not yet been given, but it is believed the sum of money which the police authorities require as security from a visiting company—in this case £200—had not been deposited early enough. The following night the performance took place as usual.

ANOTHER French play—a serious one—was given at the Deutsches Chamber Plays last week by a summer company in the absence of the company proper. The author is M. Bataille, and the title—which is the original signifies "the wedding march"—has been rendered by Herr Ettlinger as Liebeswalzer. I have said the piece is serious; it is more, it is so tragic that the eyes of more than one young German fräulein were moist. A maiden of noble birth falls in love with her pianomaster and elopes with him. The love is at the beginning very warm, but it cools down after the couple have played Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" a few times—at least, it cools on the lady's side. She finds after all that her real heart—whatever that may be—belongs to a married gentleman of rapid proclivities, and she feels convinced that there is no way out of the dilemma but one. To the soft strains of Moszkowski's "Love Waltz" the unhappy lady takes her life, a revolver shot making the one discordant note in the music. The interpretation was very good, but the audience would obviously have preferred to laugh, no matter how wild a farce might have been put before them.

THE performance of Die Walküre at the Gura Opera on Thursday was the least successful of the Wagner operas as yet given by that excellent company. Herr van Rooy was all that could be desired as Wotan, and Herr Lattermann gave a good account of Hunding; but the important rôles of Siegmund and Sieglinde—by Herr Miller and Frau Gura-Hummel respectively—were inadequate. The latter is not physically equal to the demands made upon the voice in that particular part, and the Viennese guest appeared to be indisposed. Frau Langendorf's Fricka was the reverse of goddess-like. On the other hand, the Brunhilde of Frau Guszalevicz was a splendid rendering, both in the matter of acting and singing. The performance of Siegfried was a very fine one, the name-part being interpreted in a masterly manner by Herr Urkus, of Leipzig. The house was crowded with an enthusiastic audience.

EDUCATIONAL PLAYHOUSE.

"Believing that every boy and girl possesses dramatic instinct, which longs to express itself, but does not know how," says the New York Herald, "and convinced that this instinct, when properly directed, will broaden and beautify the life of the child, furnish a legitimate form of amusement and mould character, a group of earnest women in this city have worked out a plan for this development, which they call the Educational Playhouse Association.

"This association, which has been in existence only a few months, works along lines similar to those followed by the Children's Educational Theatre, which had a brief life some time ago, but there are points of difference between the two organisations which philanthropists consider favourable to the future work of the new plan. The success with which the Playhouse Association has already met has been most encouraging to the directors.

"It does not recruit the ranks of the theatrical profession. One of the former officers of the Children's Educational Theatre, who is associated with the newer organisation, said that of fifteen hundred children who were being taught dramatic expression only three ever drifted to the stage. The others, having learned the true art of portraying emotion, which is the natural one, could not be satisfied with that kind of art which imitates an emotion.

"During the winter little one-act plays have been presented by the members of the Playhouse Association, but their most ambitious offering for the season was Pygmalion and Galatea, which was given at the Barnard College Theatre. The cast included young girls and boys, who are self-supporting, and have taken up the educational dramatic work for recreation.

"Younger players are to participate in a still more ambitious production, which will be given for the benefit of the Flower, Fruit, and Plant Guild. This is to be Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream, with a cast including dozens of youngsters, boys and girls, for elves and fairies, and some older members of the association to fill the principal rôles. It will be played on the roof of the New Amsterdam Theatre, with well-known society women for patronesses.

"The Association wants to organise dramatic clubs and children's orchestras, to utilise the love of playing for the development of the entire human being. Of course all this is for the future, but they hope and believe that it is a near future.

"Already educational dramatic work has been introduced in one of the public schools this winter with great success, and we look forward to its adoption in all the public schools of that district next year. What folk dancing does for the muscles of the body we aim to do for the moral muscles. It limbers them up, gives them perfect freedom and self-confidence.

"We have classes for instructing teachers and settlement workers in the principles which govern the educational use of dramatic instinct, and these teachers are more and more in demand in private schools and institutions. To quote Dr. G. Stanley Hall: 'Dramatic instinct is one of the strongest motive and motor forces in adolescence.' Yet this great force has, up to the present time, been neglected by educators. One result of this neglect is the low dramatic standard which prevails almost universally.

"Another result is the multiplication of cheap theatres, which have sprung up like a crop of evil mushrooms all over the city, theatres which are crowded afternoon and evening with children and young people. Yet children would rather act in good plays than see bad ones, but they must be guided and led in the right direction.

"Thus far our association has been self-supporting, and we hope to keep it so. We must make it stand on its own feet if we are to compete with the cheap shows all over town. However, there are several wealthy women interested in the association, who stand ready to help us financially when we need it.

"Mrs. Emma Sheridan Fry, under whose direction the policy of the Educational Theatre commanded the attention of educators throughout the country, is working with the children.

PROGRAMME AND HANDICAP.

Special Note.—The sports handicap was revised by the Handicapper, Mr. Robert P. Watson, on Thursday evening, and he says this handicap is made on the Sheffield handicap principle, viz.—Scratch man on three yards mark. This gives indifferent runners a better chance, having less distance to go. This handicap cannot properly be compared, as to individual starts, with last year's handicap unless this new method is borne in mind.

Ticket sellers are urged to let the Hon. Secretary have unsold tickets and receipts for those sold by 8 p.m. on Monday at the very latest.

DRESSES AT THE PLAY.

A picturesque note is struck in the dresses in Billy's Bargain at the Garrick, many of the costumes having been brought expressly from Russia. A charming dress, worn by Miss Olga Morra, is arranged with a long tunic made of a coarse material—a mixture of serge and mohair. This tunic is dead-black, but is richly trimmed at the bottom with embroideries worked in green and blue and black, headed by bands of gold braid, which in their turn are surmounted by a design worked in gold sequins. The sleeveless bodice is cut square at the neck, where the gold braid and embroidery are repeated to make a wide edging, while the sleeves and chemisette are of coarse white linen worked in red cotton cross-stitch. The tunic falls over a long, straight dress of very coarse white linen, decorated at the foot with embroideries in blue and purple beads, worked after a heavy floral design, below which is arranged a deep frill of crochet lace.

Another dress has a tunic of very stiff mohair, beautifully embroidered in coarse white thread. This decoration is carried up the front to the waist, and is framed by further embroideries in gold sequins, while the edge of the tunic is finished with a deep scallop piped with yellow and black. The under-dress is of cotton, and is edged with a frill of crochet lace bordered with tiny green beads, and the loose sleeves are finished at the wrists in the same manner. The stockings worn with these dresses are of coarse wool, with elaborately embroidered fronts, and the leather shoes are quaintly made and are fastened across the instep like sandals.

Fashionable evening dresses, displaying a variety of tunic effects, are also to be seen. One very charming example is carried out in petunia-coloured satin. The corsage is draped across to one side, and the draperies are caught at the waist by a deep band of silver lace, which is also used to decorate the edge of the straight tunic and to make the chemisette and sleeves. A second evening dress is of pastelle-blue satin, with a tunic which is cut to have a square effect, it being longer at the sides than in the front. This tunic is edged with silver lace, and is bordered with deep white bead fringe. The corsage is crossed with bands of silver lace, and is finished at the back with two tiny tabs edged with the lace. A tunic of mole-grey net over blue satin makes another lovely dress; and dark brown net and pale buff satin are combined for a fourth.

The Princess of Priscilla Runs Away, the new comedy at the Haymarket, is charmingly dressed by Miss Neilson-Terry. In the first act Priscilla is seen in an evening gown made of white mousseline de soie, with embroideries of silver and strass, and finished with finely-kilted white mousseline de soie, which beneath the tunic falls in soft folds.

The running-away episode finds Miss Neilson-Terry in a gown of fine mother-of-pearl grey cloth with a yoke and inner sleeves of chiffon and net and a skirt arranged in flat panels, alternating with soft folds drawn into a broad hem at the sides. Over the dress is worn a grey cloth motor-coat, lined with satin to match, and fastened with large cabochon buttons, and a hat is added of coarse straw of a pale shade of rose like the soft pink of mother-of-pearl, trimmed with wings shading from grey to pink and mauve. In the last act the Princess, as the invalid victim of influen

MR. OSCAR ASCHE IN AUSTRALIA.

The members of the Adelaide University Shakespearean Society assembled at the University on May 21, to tender a reception to Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Asche. Rp. Glynn (one of the Vice-Presidents of the Society) presided.

The chairman cordially welcomed the visitors on behalf of the society. They came to Adelaide, remarked the speaker, with a double reputation—they represented the perfect union of soul and interest—which was really typical of imperial union, the leading idea of modern statesmanship—and they were exceptional exponents of the histrionic art. It was appropriate that the University Shakespearean Society should extend a hearty welcome to Mr. and Mrs. Asche, for it had as its object the inducing of a keener relish for the works of the great master, and the development and popularising of them in a wider sphere. He was sure the visitors could appreciate the depth and sincerity of their welcome, because they brought with them a company which maintained the finest traditions of the British stage. They had offered citizens of Adelaide an opportunity, which rarely came, of seeing in the flesh some of the greatest types which the master presented, and of having these brought home to the mind by perfect voice and action, which were secrets of perfect acting. The effect of the drama must be all the greater when it was remembered that the drama was really wedded to some of the best literature extant, and when they found in Shakespeare not only the classical to read, but works which were capable of perfect representation. A few months ago he had taken a night off from the insincerities and delusions of politics to see Othello played by Mr. Asche, and it was one of the few occasions in his life upon which he found that reputation and report had not exceeded merits. In Mr. Asche's Othello they had the Othello of Shakespeare—the simplicity and greatness of character, and the perplexities and perturbations of mood and spirit. The Desdemona of Mrs. Asche was also the Desdemona of their imagination. Citizens of Adelaide were deeply indebted to Mr. and Mrs. Asche for having organised a company worthy of the traditions of the British stage. As a vice-president of the University Shakespearean Society he extended to the visitors a hearty welcome.

The Mayor of Adelaide (Mr. L. Cohen) expressed the pleasure of the citizens at the presence of the distinguished visitors in their midst. The great and immortal Shakespeare, in one of his plays, had said that the evil that men did oft lived after them; the good they did was oft interred with their bones. He would not presume to transpose one word of so great a writer as Shakespeare, but at the same time he thought that it was the good that men did which lived after them. The advent of Mr. and Mrs. Asche in South Australia would do good in South Australia, and give people an opportunity of hearing the great works of Shakespeare interpreted as they had never heard them before. He was confident that the inhabitants of the City of Culture would show their appreciation of Mr. and Mrs. Asche's all-too-short visit by recording splendid attendances at the plays to be presented to them. Apart from the personal point of view—for Mr. and Mrs. Asche were well known to them by fame—the visit, he ventured to say, would, from a Shakespearean point of view, do much to improve the mind and enable young people, in particular, to realise the beauty of the writings of the great master.

Mr. Oscar Asche, who was received with enthusiastic applause, returned thanks on behalf of his wife and himself, and the members of his company. It was not the original intention of his company to appear in Adelaide. They had, in the first place, come to Australia for only six months, and were to appear for three months each in Melbourne and Sydney. As they had been appreciated in each of those cities—the cities of business and pleasure, according to Mr. Foster Fraser—it was due to the City of Culture that they should come to Adelaide. They had been unable to secure more than a fortnight at the Theatre Royal, and it had to be decided what were the best plays to produce. There were seven or eight plays in their répertoire, all but one of which were Shakespearean. Finally, they had fixed upon a farce, The Taming of the Shrew; one of the master's finest productions, The Merchant of Venice; his greatest domestic tragedy, Othello; and an historical play, Julius Cæsar. They had divided the plays so that lovers of Shakespeare in the State could come to see different aspects of Shakespeare's genius on different nights of the week. The Mayor had referred to the words "the evil that men do lives after them." He hoped that they would do no evil in the State that would live after them. It would be their effort to do good, and offer to citizens of Adelaide the best of their art. When he first came to Australia he was told that it was no use bringing Shakespearean plays out, because Australia was the home of musical comedy. During the company's stay in Melbourne, though, it had put to rout several musical comedies. He had even heard one person say, coming out of the theatre, "It's as good as any musical comedy I have ever seen." Shakespeare's humour was cleaner, more wholesome, and funnier than any of the humour of modern dramatic writers. Although his company had here and there taken liberty with the Shakespearean text, as they had to consider many things, such as late trains and so on, they had endeavoured to retain as much of the text as possible for a three hours' production. He might mention that, approaching the city of Adelaide in the train, it had seemed to the members of his company and himself, when they looked out of the carriage windows, that they were back in England. He did not know whether it was the autumnal tints which caused that impression, but the scenery was like that of some of the midland counties of the old country. When he left Australia he hoped it would be to return in two years' time. He thanked them heartily for the welcome accorded him and his wife.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Mr. Leonard Carrodus, Miss Elsie Avril, Miss Janet Macfie, and Mr. John Snowden were the executants in Dvorák's Quartet for Strings, in F major, at the College concert on Thursday evening, June 23. The attack was somewhat uncertain in the opening movement, but the young performers secured a good rendering of the Lento and Molto vivace, and received much applause at the conclusion of the quartet. Miss Bertha Nottingham and Miss Ellen Bartlett were associated in an able performance of W. Hurlstone's rather dull and uninteresting Sonata for Piano and Violoncello in D major. The Adagio, with its plaintive theme, is not without merit, but the Scherzo and other movements were far too long. Miss Dorothy Devin proved herself a clever violinist in Sulzer's "Sarabande," "Albumblatt" (Wagner), and Sarasate's difficult "Zigeunerweisen," and well deserved her hearty recalls. Miss Florence Richardson sang "Immer bei dir" (Raff) and Brahms' more effective "Sonntag" with good tone and expression; while Mr. Joseph Ireland, for his fine artistic singing of "Young Dietrich" (G. Henschel) had a most enthusiastic reception. The programme was completed with the singing of Berlioz's "Absence" by Miss Bessie Jones, and Mr. Arthur Heberden's organ solo, Toccata and Fugue, in D minor (Bach). The accompanists were Miss Alice Cotton and Mr. William Murdoch.

AMONGST the audience at the performance of Faust at Covent Garden on Wednesday were the Duchess of Rutland and her daughters, the Earl of Portsmouth, Dora Countess of Chesterfield, the Countess of Craven, Lord and Lady Raglan, Baron and Baroness de Meyer, Lady Margaret Douglas, and Lord Cecil Manners.

PLAYERS OF THE PERIOD.

MR. PERCY H. VERNON.

Yeoman service in the cause of the drama has been done by Mr. Percy H. Vernon, who completed his twenty-fifth year on the stage last August, his principal engagements having been in répertoire companies. He commenced in a stock company at Torquay, playing Rowley (School for Scandal), and combined the duties of prompter. After unimportant tours, Mr. Vernon joined the late Miss Sarah Thorne for three years, tours and stock work, playing many parts, from Shakespeare to burlesque. An engagement with Mr. F. R. Benson came next, playing character parts and discharging the stage-management, under Mr. Hugh Moss. Having fulfilled a long tour as Harry Seabrook (Captain Swift) and Felix (Mystery of a Hansom Cab), Mr. Vernon joined Mr. Ben Greet for three years, playing, amongst other parts, Sir Oliver Surface, Hardcastle, Colley Cibber, Capulet, Le Beau, William, Old Gobbo, Osric, Trinculo, Sir Toby Belch, Ægeus, and Oliver the Devil. Tours with A Life of Pleasure (Edmund Tearle) and Royal Divorce followed. During vacations in following years Mr. Vernon had stock seasons and pastoral plays with his own companies. He then rejoined Mr. Ben Greet for Glabrio, and played it for over two and a half years, followed by Sabaal (Daughters of Babylon), Lord Rintoul (Little Minister), and Three Musketeers. He was Mr. Greet's stage and general-manager for most of the time. Afterwards he toured as Lord Lorton (Lady Windermere's Fan), Earl of Cavisham (Ideal Husband), Lord Dangars (Profligate), Roderick Heron (Lady Bountiful), Sir George Gilding (Professor's Love Story), and stage-management.

Engaged by Mr. Leonard Rayne for three South African tours, 1900-1904, Mr. Vernon played in over seventy plays, some of his parts being Tramp (Message from Mars), Charles II. (English Nell), Father Lamplugh (Christian), Dudley Roper (Prodigal Daughter), Hon. Percy Blanchflower (Masqueraders), Scarsi (Life of Pleasure), Mardyke (Human Nature), Chigi (Cardinal), Oxley (Sunday), Louis XIII. (Musketeers), Dr. Ceneri (Called Back), Angelleli (Eternal City), and Bishop (Bishop's Candlesticks). Then came a tour as Larolle (Under the Red Robe), Alderman (Garrick), Sparkish (Country Girl); and next he stage-managed and played the Postman in Duke of Killicrankie; also Lord Petworth (Sowing the Wind), Bartholomew (Spectacles), and General Merryweather (Idler). After the Scala production of A Royal Divorce and a suburban tour, Mr. Vernon joined Miss F. Glossop-Harris as stage-director, and played Mercutio, Malvolio, Touchstone, Tranio, Don Pedro, Gratiano (Merchant), Whiskerandos (Critic), Col. Anketell (Royal Oak), Varville (Camille), and collaborated with Mr. Cellier in a dramatic version of Carmen. Following a tour with Ibsen's plays as Judge Brack (Hedda Gabler), Krogstad (Doll's House), and Ulric

Brendel (Rosmersholm), Mr. Vernon rejoined A Royal Divorce company as Talleyrand. In the spring of last year he was with Mr. Robert Hilton, playing Joseph (Richelieu), Alderman (Garrick), Louis XI. (Gringoire), and creating the comedy part in A Dance of Love. He has recently concluded an engagement with Mrs. Lewis Waller's Admiral's Lady company. Mr. Vernon has had an excellent training for stage-manager, under the able direction of Mr. Hugh Moss, Mr. Charles Daly, and the late William Sidney. During his career he must have played in some 400 plays and enacted 700 parts.

MISS SOPHIE LINGWOOD.

Miss Sophie Lingwood, so happily cast as the celebrated Mrs. Wiggs, in Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, is peculiarly fitted to be an exponent of the eccentricities of the American character, for her childhood was spent in Victoria, B.C. In San Francisco she studied elocution with that famous old actress, Mrs. Judah, and singing with Signor Mancusi. She made her début as Lydia in Fatanitza, and achieved such an extraordinary success that she was cast for Bettina in La Mascotte, the next production. Subsequently she appeared in such rôles as Josephine in H.M.S. Pinafore, the Countess in Olivette, Leila in Satanella, and Serpolette in Les Cloches de Corneville. Miss Lingwood afterwards toured the United States with several musical comedies, next taking up Miss Minnie Palmer's part in Fun in a Boarding School, and playing it for nearly a year.

Her first engagement in England was with Mr. Willie Edouin, who at once secured her for Meemo in The Japs. Thereafter Miss Lingwood made an especial study of character parts. A prolonged tour with Miss Melnotte's Erminie company was followed by another with Mr. H. J. Leslie's Dorothy company. She then went to South Africa with Mr. Hirchfield's comedy company, and on the conclusion of that tour was engaged by Messrs. Thorne and Perkins for comic opera and burlesque. During her stay in South Africa she played, among other parts, Mrs. Gillibrand, Arabian Nights; Mrs. Gilfillian, Sweet Lavender; Tina, My Sweetheart; Zeffie, Hans the Boatman; Suzanne, Madame Favart; and Phœbe, Yeomen of the Guard. Miss Lingwood regards the two years spent in South Africa as being among her pleasantest experiences.

On her return to England she toured with revivals of Erminie and Dorothy, and created the character of Widow Ferns in Mr. Murray Ford's opera, Gretna Green. Later on, following the example of Miss Marie Tempest and Miss Ethel Irving, Miss Lingwood forsook light opera and musical comedy for rather more serious work. She played Countess Zicka in Diplomacy, Lady Staunton in Captain Swift, and Miss Gwyn-Stanmore in The Idler. She was with Mr. Penley during his last season at Penley's Theatre, and was in several tours of Mr. Mouillot's Man from Blankley's. She also played Lady Gwyn-Stanley in Mr. Eugène Stafford's Simple Simon company. In her recent tours with Mr. Edward Terry she has played Mrs. Gilfillian and all leading character parts.

Practically her first chance to play a really emotional character came when Miss Lingwood was offered the part of Mrs. Smith in Mr. Walter Reynolds' Mr. Smith, and the reception which her portrayal of this charming old lady met with left her no more in doubt that her real strength lay in the delineation of pathos. Shortly after this she had the very real pleasure of seeing Mrs. Madge Carr-Cook as Mrs. Wiggs, and realised that this was a character after her own heart. From the first she had an idea that she would play it herself some day, and this proved to be one of those very few presentiments which "come true."

This versatile lady has had the good fortune to meet with a very considerable amount of success as a journalist, and also as a writer of light fic-

MR. HERBERT SHELLEY.

An adventurous as well as an artistic career has been passed by Mr. Herbert Shelley, whose popularity is great both in this country and in America. For a number of years Mr. Shelley played principal parts in dramatic productions on the legitimate stage, but, like many of his brother artists, he eventually became a deserter, and took to the halls with dramatic sketches of his own composition. Since he has been in the vaudeville business there have been remarkable changes both in the music-halls themselves and the attitude towards the artists. For instance, six years ago the professional club of which Mr. Shelley is a member had only two actors who had gone over to the halls on its books—Mr. Albert Chevalier and Mr. Shelley—whilst at the present time there are more than fifty.

From the age of thirteen Mr. Shelley has spent his time in England, America, and Canada, and he confesses that he has to thank the people on "the other side" for the hustle and perseverance he has cultivated, and which has carried him over several failures to success. When the Canadian Pacific Railway line between Vancouver and Montreal was opened, Mr. Shelley travelled on the first passenger train that made the journey, and he rode hundreds of miles in the saddle up country beyond Winnipeg when practically all that one saw were the whitened remains of buffalos round about the lakes, very little vegetation, and rarely a human being, except an occasional Red Indian. In that same place there now exist—after the lapse of only a few years—large and flourishing cities, in which are huge public buildings, gorgeous theatres and music-halls, and even football leagues.

From Canada Mr. Shelley went to New York, where he joined Lester Wallack's stock company on Broadway. There he had some valuable experience in old comedy, including She Stoops to Conquer, and the usual round of English comedies, together with Speed the Plough and other pieces seldom played now. Subsequently Mr. Shelley toured the States as a member of several other companies, and on coming to England joined the late Osmond Tearle, the famous Shakespearean actor. Since then he has divided his time between acting, both in theatres and music halls, and in working as a dramatist. In the theatres he has been in several celebrated companies, including those of Sir Charles Wyndham and Mr. Arthur Bourchier.

During the past few years Mr. Shelley has had a number of pleasant engagements with Mr. Oswald Stoll, whom he regards as the hope of the music-hall artist for the future. He believes that it is Mr. Stoll's idea eventually to give artists fifty weeks' work in every year, which will be a good deal better than the present system, under which performers from time to time experience "gaps," or "weeks out," and do not like them. Mr. Shelley is of the opinion that the vaudeville business is in the transition stage, and that the outcome will be a lighter form of entertainment in which only the better artists, singers, and instrumentalists will participate. It would not surprise him—in fact he almost expects it—to see variety performances consisting of a continuity of one-act musical comedies or operas with surroundings of bright colouring and pretty faces.

As an author and composer Mr. Shelley has also won renown, and many popular songs and successful operas and plays have emanated from his pen. Altogether Mr. Shelley has written 150 songs that are well known to the general public, amongst which is the camp song, "As I smoke, smoke, smoke," which met with such general favour during the Boer war, whilst amongst his plays and operas are The Handy Man, An English Violet, Dan the Outlaw, The Marriage of Mignon, and Bill Adams, an opera which was written for Mr. Arthur Roberts. Mr. Shelley also wrote a number of songs for Dan Leno, whilst other ditties from his pen have been sung by other distinguished variety celebrities.

One of Mr. Shelley's most successful sketches was Hamlet the Harmless, which he wrote for Mr. Oswald Stoll, for production at the London Coliseum. It was played by Mr. Walter Passmore and other old Savoyards. In conjunction with Mr. Frank E. Tours, Mr. Shelley wrote an opera called Melnotte, founded upon The Lady of Lyons, which was produced at the Coronet Theatre, London, and taken on tour. Sweet Briar was another pretty musical play which he wrote, and it ran for three years. Mr. Shelley, too, wrote the version of East Lynne which Mr. Henry Dundas has toured for years.

MR EDWARD S. PETLEY.

Mr. Edward S. Petley was born at Old Charlton, in Kent, and comes of an old Service stock, his father and grandfather being officers in the Royal Navy, while he has many relations in both Services. He was early interested in dramatic art as an amateur, and was one of the founders of the Dagonet Dramatic Club, which still flourishes. His first professional engagement was with the late Trevor Warde in a répertoire consisting of Sweet Lavender, A Pair of Spectacles, A Bunch of Violets, The Balloon, &c., which was followed by an excursion into the fit-ups with Carlyon and Charlton as Captain Holcroft in In the Ranks. Shortly afterwards he was engaged by Mr. George Alexander for his long tour while the St. James's Theatre was rebuilt, appearing in The Ambassador, In Days of Old, The Masqueraders, The Prisoner of Zenda, &c., afterwards accompanying Mr. Alexander to town for the run of Rupert of Hentzau. Then followed a tour with Mr. Sydney J. Pease in For the King as Rupert Vane, subsequently rejoining Mr. Alexander for the production of Paolo and Francesca. Later he was engaged by Mr. Watson Mill for the juvenile part in The Seal of Silence, followed by lead in The 10.30 Down Express, juvenile lead in The Grip of Iron with the late John Atkin, a stock season at the West London with Mr. Bailey in My Jack, Star of India, &c.

Change came with sketch work on the halls at various times with Arthur Conquest, Fred Winn, Brien McCullough, Frank Gerald, &c. Deserting melodrama, Mr. Petley played Mr. Plant for a tour of Oh! Susannah! Mr. Coke in The Liars, and then joined Mr. Ernest E. Norris to play Richelieu in The Three Musketeers and Lord Caversham in An Ideal Husband. Other parts he has sustained with Mr. Norris are Reggie Slingsby in The Dancing Girl, Count Muller in The Woman of Kronstadt, Pasquali in The Morals of Marcus, Howard Collingham in John Glayde's Honour, &c. Shakespeare was the next change, Mr. Petley appearing in Cymbeline in the Glasgow and Birmingham productions, interspersed by a tour as Abernethy Ruppershaw in In the Soup, with Mr. Tom Thorne as Charlie in Our Boys, Mortimer in Confusion, &c., and a stock season with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sugden in Jim the Penman, Wheels within Wheels, Camille, &c. Under Mr. John Hart's management he has played tours as Hildebrand Carstairs in The Second in Command, Colonel Jardine in Mrs. Gorringe's Necklace, &c. He returned to town for The Sin of William Jackson at the Lyric.

Mr. Petley achieved considerable success on the first two tours of The Flag Lieutenant as Surgeon Crutchley, and returned to the halls for awhile in Fred Winn's fine sketch The Light in the Window. He has dabbled, moreover, in play-writing, being part author of the successful farce The Other Man's Business, and he recently finished a costume play in collaboration with Mr. Francis Chamier.

Mr. Petley has now gone into management, in conjunction with Miss Una Gilbert, and is touring this summer the recent Playhouse success Little Mrs. Cummin, by Richard Pryce.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

At the students' concert on Monday afternoon the first item on the programme was the "Allegro Brillante," from Schumann's E flat Quintet for piano, two violins, viola, and 'cello, intelligently played by Miss Briand Prager, Miss Constance Martin, Miss Hazel Giles, Mr. James Carroll, and Miss Winifred Love, members of the Chamber Music class. In two songs of Landon Ronald's, "Down in the forest" and "The spring, my dear, is no longer spring," Miss Edith Davies greatly pleased the audience; while Miss Eugénie Lenaerts, a very young pianist of the college, neatly executed Chaminade's Moment Musical; "Rose in the Bud" (Forster), and d'Hardelot's popular "Because" were ably sung by Miss Jessie Blake; and Miss Hilda Felstead, an advanced student, sang with excellent expression two songs (MS.), cleverly written by Miss Eunice Mort, pupil of Dr. Saunders. The songs were entitled "An impression" and "Wind o' the autumn," the latter proving the more attractive. A piano solo, "Danse Nègre," by Cyril Scott, was effectively played by Miss Flora L. Willoughby; and Miss Doris Fell, another clever young pianist, gave a good account of Chopin's C sharp minor Scherzo. "The Flower Song" (Faust) was sung by Miss Jennie Clarke; and Mr. Harry Gray was much applauded in his piano solo "Hexentanz" (MacDowell).

MISS IDA HERON has been engaged by Mr. Tom Watt for his East Lynne company for the rôle of Mme. Vine.

The attendance at the old Theatre Royal, on Friday evening, the 24th, when the above drama was produced, must be considered as quite satisfactory, and it is with pleasure that we have to record the success achieved. Messrs. Frederick A. Marston and Maurice Scott are to be praised for the able manner in which they have constructed their play, which keeps the attention of the audience riveted throughout. The dialogue is effective, and the characterisation leaves nothing to be desired.

In the prologue Sir Herbert Comerford makes his appearance with his child, and announces that, owing to a carriage accident, his wife has been killed, and that his child is at death's door. Sir Herbert confides in his half-drunken servant, Comer Helmstone, that if his boy dies his name dies with him, together with all his hopes and ambitions. Sir Herbert has been pronounced incurable of a painful malady, and if he dies without issue his title and estates would pass to the family of Colonel Cronshaw, heirs-at-law and life-long enemies of the Comerfords. He induces Helmstone to place his own son in the cradle, and Sir Herbert's by his wife's side, promising to bring the exchanged boy up as heir to the Comerford estates. Comer hands his child over to Sir Herbert, who is just opening the door when Mrs. Helmstone appears at the top of the stairs. She screams for her child. Her husband seizes her by the arm, and strikes her. She falls across the table, and in doing so clutches the document in which Sir Herbert agrees to pay Comer Helmstone a thousand pounds in consideration of the exchange of the children. Mrs. Helmstone takes the exchanged baby from the cradle, and discovering that it is not hers, curses those who have robbed her of her offspring.

Between the prologue and Act I. twenty-five years are supposed to elapse, and we are introduced to the false Sir Herbert, the villain of the piece, who tries all kinds of subterfuges to win Miriam Cronshaw as his wife, in order to get some much-needed cash. Miriam is in love with Paul Desmond, a manly and upright young medical man, and Sir Herbert, in order to blacken his character in the eyes of Miriam, drops a note, which he contrives to get from Nellie Yeulett, whom he has betrayed, and in which Paul Desmond is accused of being the father of her unborn child.

Sir Herbert and Miriam are next seen at Venice, where he tries to force her to marry him. The marriage is about to take place, but is intercepted by Paul Desmond. In the last act Mrs. Helmstone produces the document, which proves her supposed son to be the real heir to the estates. She tries to claim the love of her son in spite of his evil nature; but he brutally spurns it, and in his rage stabs and kills Comer Helmstone, the rightful baronet.

The piece was well acted by Mr. Hubert Helliwell's company. To Miss Ada Hender as Mrs. Helmstone we cannot give too much praise, her acting being intensely dramatic, and she gained the heartiest reception for her admirable conception of a most trying part. Another lady who also scored a conspicuous success was Miss Maud Garth, who, as Miriam, played in charming style. Miss Madge Maher did full justice to the character of Nellie Yeulett. Mr. Hubert Helliwell left nothing to be desired as Paul Desmond, a part he played in a thoroughly manly and convincing manner. A lot of work fell to Mr. Basil Mitchell as Sir Herbert Comerford, the evil genius, but throughout he acted with a restraint and cleverness that calls for special praise. Mr. F. Owen Chambers, an actor of great ability, made a popular and clever exponent of the part of Comer Helmstone. Mr. Charles F. Johnson, besides undertaking the duties of business-manager of the company, made a dignified and typical old soldier and retired gentleman of Colonel Cronshaw. Miss Emily Lewis as Kitty Maynard and Mr. Fred Luard as Tom Drewitt made themselves very popular, and kept the audience in continual merriment, their scene at Venice, where Tom poses as an Italian, being provocative of one continual roar of merriment. Mr. J. O. Stevenson did capital work in the character of David; and Mr. Owen Edwin deserves praise as Peter. Mr. Fred. A. Marston (part author) appeared satisfactorily as the Friar. At the close of the play the audience gave the company hearty applause. We should not omit to mention that Mr. Hubert Helliwell staged the play in admirable style.

THE MANAGERS' CLUB.

On Saturday last a dinner was given to celebrate the opening of the new and beautiful premises of the above club, at 5, Wardour-street, the president, Mr. Wentworth Croke, taking the chair. His health was proposed in a very happy and apt speech by the vice-president, Mr. Montague Leveaux. The principal toast of the evening, "The King," which Mr Wentworth Croke duly proposed, was received with the expression of loyalty which was to be expected. Then Mr. Leveaux spoke in detail of the new premises, explaining the many advantages and central position as compared with the old premises in Savoy-mansions. He drew attention to the hard work that had been done by the committee regarding the moving and furnishing of the new premises, also urging the necessity of the members working together to further their own cause and support the new club, as naturally great expense had been incurred in the removal. Mr. Wentworth Croke, in a very neat and brief speech proposed the health of the sub-committee, and thanked them for all they had done to make the club the success it now was, impressing upon them the great point of unity in working together for a common cause. This was suitably responded to by Mr. Carlton Wallace and Mr. Lauderdale Maitland. The new premises consist of three floors, elaborately furnished and decorated, the writing and dining-rooms especially so. There are card-rooms, buffet, and billiard-room, and in course of erection what will be a great luxury in the summer months, viz., a winter garden. Amongst those present were Mr. Herbert Ralland, Mr. J. Bannister Howard, Mr. M. V. Leveaux, Mr. E. Lockwood, Mr. Louis De Reeder, Mr. A. Paumier, Mr. W. Muskerry Tilson, Mr. Lauderdale Maitland, Mr. E. Norris, Mr. W. Barton, Mr. F. Weathersby, Mr. W. Martin, Mr. Trueman Towers, Mr. Carlton Wallace, Mr. E. Taylor Piatt, Mr. George Gray, Mr. Stanley Ashworth, Mr. C. Barth, Mr. G. B. Lambert, Mr. Ernest Simmons, Mr. W. Gifford, Mr. Edward Jose, Mr. H. A. Langlois, Mr. W. C. Simpson, Mr. Harry Lumley, Mr. Leon M. Lion, Mr. Cayley Calvert, Mr. C. H. Woodhouse, Mr. A. H. Brydon, Mr. W. Scott Phipp, Mr. Sam Walsh, Mr. G. Spencer Edwards, and Mr. Carson.

LONDON & SUBURBAN THEATRES.

"CASTE."

Last Saturday the late T. W. Robertson's Caste was revived at the elegant Notting Hill-gate theatre by Mr. Robert Arthur, under the auspices of Mr. Bade Montefiore, with signal success. Miss Ellen Terry and Sir John Hare, among others, have been the first to congratulate the management on the thorough enjoyment of these interesting revivals. Caste is perhaps the most satisfying of Robertson's dramas, and never fails to meet with a hearty welcome when it is adequately cast. In the present instance an excellent all-round representation is given, with here and there quite a noticeable triumph of histrionic skill and ability. Miss Adeline Bourne is a powerful tragic and emotional actress, with the art of moving her audience almost imperceptibly until they are roused to intense and poignant feeling, and as Esther Eccles she has full scope for the display of her personal magnetism. Mr. O. B. Clarence as the drink-sodden, despicable old Eccles, forever belauding work and never doing a stroke himself, has an excellent field for the exhibition of his versatility and keen sense of character. It is an admirable embodiment, full of deft suggestions of the degradation of the man and the meretricious nature of his philosophy. Miss Rosie Begarnie is very bright and alert, and acts with feeling and expressiveness as the devil-may-care Polly Eccles, and not the least convincing part of her performance is her persistent ingenuous extenuation of her father's conduct. Mr. Athol Stewart is earnest, virile, and sincere as the Hon. George D'Alroy, and is always well in the picture as the lovelorn leveller of rank and position. Mr. James Carew is rapidly improving in his profession, and the part of Captain Hawtree fits him like a glove, the more serious side of the character being cleverly dwelt on as well as the more obviously comic attributes. Mr. Edgar Kent is as merry as a grig as Polly's plumber and gasfitting sweetheart, the enterprising and business-like Sam Gerridge. Miss A. B. Tapping is quite the grande dame as the Marquise de St. Maur, and instils much grasp of character into her performance, which is one of great merit. The selections from Schubert by the Chamber Quartet, under the direction of Mr. W. Meyer are excellently rendered.

THE ELEPHANT AND CASTLE.

"THE 10.30 DOWN EXPRESS."

Mr. Horace Stanley's company in The 10.30 Down Express is here this week. In Jack O'Malley, capably represented by Mr. T. Arthur Plummer, we have a hero who is by turn an officer in the Navy, convict, signalman, and sailor again. Mr. George Arthur is the recipient of much abuse as the villainous James Inderwick; Mr. Edwin Clarke makes a good detective as Huntley Mason; Mr. T. B. Brabazon plays well as Cuthbert Leigh; Mr. Ivan Roland is the broken-down gamekeeper, Seth Coombs; as Sam Wagstaffe Mr. Horace Stanley is a conspicuous success and a very hard-working comedian; Mr. A. E. Francis as Butterby Baggs, the broker's man, is an eccentric figure; Miss Cora Linda well sustains the part of the heroine, Bessie Leigh; Miss Ida Fare scores greatly as Letitia Leigh; and Miss Kate Kilpack makes things lively as Peggy Potts. The play is well staged under the direction of Mr. Evan Roland, the scene representing the signal-box and the attempted destruction of the express being very realistic.

THE BROADWAY, S.E.

"THE TICKET-OF-LEAVE MAN."

This is the last week of the engagement of the stock company, and the various members are seen to advantage in the ever-popular Ticket-of-Leave Man. The story of Bob Brierly's misfortunes always interests, and Mr. Vassall-Vaughan is excellent in the part; Miss Alice Defoe gives a pathetic rendering of the faithful, loving wife May Edwards; Miss Amy Venimore is a capital representative of the talkative but lovable Mrs. Willoughby, whose mischievous grandson Sam is capitally played by Miss Claire Milvain. The Green Jones scenes, so often omitted, are played with excellent effect by Mr. R. A. Robinson as Jones and Miss Sadie Neville as Emily St. Evremond; Mr. Fred Terriss gives a fine portrait of Jem Dalton; Mr. Ellis J. Preston makes a hit as Hawkshaw; Mr. Will H. Clement is a clever Melter Moss; and Mr. E. Emery a dignified Mr. Gibson. All the well-known situations receive their due meed of applause.

BRIXTON THEATRE.

"MONTE CRISTO."

Mounted with care, and remarkably well played, the capital adaptation of Dumas' novel has proved very successful at this popular South London playhouse, where the members of the stock company have become established favourites. Mr. H. Bonhote Wilson is to be highly commended upon his versatile and spirited acting as the Count de Monte Cristo; and Miss Mary Pemberton realises perfectly the character of the Catalian, Mercedes. Both artists deserved the ovation they received. Mr. Newman Maurice revels in the humours of the drunken tailor, Caderouse, and his popularity is remarkable. Mr. W. H. Porter does valuable work as Danglars; Mr. Walter Graham is to be commended for his M. Novitier; as is Mr. Victor Loraine for his impersonation of M. Villefort. Albert de Morcerf is in clever Mr. Marius St. John's hands; Mr. Will Smith impressively enacts the Abbé Faria; and Mr. Herbert Godard is prominent as the Count de Morcerf. Miss Grace Emery is well cast as La Carconte; and Miss May Day makes the most of the character of Marie. The play is handsomely staged, and reflects every credit on Mr. Newman Maurice and his clever coadjutors. The incidental music is well played by the orchestra under the skilful direction of Mr. W. T. Gliddon.

KENNINGTON THEATRE.

"HANDS ACROSS THE SEA."

The revival of Henry Pettitt's absorbing and well-constructed drama Hands Across the Sea by Mr. Robert Arthur's stock company at Kennington Theatre this week proved one of the most interesting of the present series, and Mr. H. Barrett Brandreth, the acting-manager, has had occasion to congratulate himself on the magnitude of the business done. The production was complete in every respect, in acting, staging, and dressing. Mr. Walter Gay was excellent as Jack Dudley, the hero, and the rôle of the heroine (Lilian Melford) was again filled by Miss Jessie Wynter. This lady possesses an engaging personality, but her impersonation would be improved if she imparted more warmth to the love scenes with the hero, this apparent slight aloofness being the one drawback in an otherwise clever and attractive study. Mr. Fred Morgan found ample scope for his very considerable histrionic talents as Robert Stillwood, and his efforts were ably seconded by Mr. Wilson Blake as the selfish Joseph Stillwood. The comic relief was furnished by that astute comedian Mr. Maitland Marler, who was full of fun as Tom Bassett. Mr. Frank Crimp, in the rôle of the roué Count Paul de Reval, won fresh laurels, whilst Miss Winifred Whyte gave a vivid little sketch of the character of Mme. Valerie, the keeper of the gaming saloon. Another graphic piece of stage portraiture was Mr. Frank Robertson's impersonation of Jean de Lussac, the French adventurer, and he scored heavily in the last scene. Mr. G. P. Polson was well placed as the warm-hearted Richard Melford; and others who deserve mention are Mr. Leslie Fergusson (Lieut. Victor), Mr. George Carter (Inspector Thompson), Mr. G. D. Hunter (Mate), and Miss Elsie Videau (Midshipman).

THE LYCEUM.

On Saturday, June 25, the Revival of the Drama, in Four Acts, by John Rutherford, entitled

"THE BREED OF THE TRESHAMS."

Lieut. Beresby, "The Rat" ..... MR. MARTIN HARVEY
Viscount Dorsington ..... MR. PHILIP HEWLAND
Col. the Hon. Clement Hungerford ..... MR. CHARLES GLENNEY
Col. Sir Henry Curwen ..... MR. ERIC MAYNE
Col. Bagshaw ..... MR. S. MAJOR JONES
Capt. Stanhope ..... MR. EDWARD COMBERMERE
Capt. Rashleigh ..... MR. ALFRED MANSFIELD
Lieut. Willoughby ..... MR. DENHOLM MUIR
Cornet the Hon. Francis Tresham ..... MR. LEONARD CRASKE
Cornet Pit Keyton ..... MR. PERCY FOSTER
Corporal Lumsford ..... MR. GEORGE COOKE
Corporal Saxton ..... MR. A. B. MCKAY
Will Lumsford ..... MR. B. A. PITTAR
Jevons ..... MR. A. WILSON
Servant ..... MR. DAVID BAIN
Hon. Margaret Hungerford ..... MISS BRENDA GIBSON
Mrs. Bagshaw ..... MISS BESSIE ELDER
Helena Pierrepoint ..... MISS SYBIL WALSH
Batty ..... MISS N. DE SILVA

Mr. Martin Harvey on Saturday evening appealed to an immense crowd of his admirers at the Lyceum Theatre in a part that he may be said to have made his own. It is nearly seven years since he first asserted himself in the fine romantic character of Lieutenant Beresby, nicknamed "The Rat," in The Breed of the Treshams, a piece that has added considerably to the popularity of his repertory, first in the provinces and then in London. We are again in the picturesque period of Royalist and Roundhead, which has been as prolific in its supply of plays for the stage as the French Revolution, and become immediately interested in the fortunes of the protagonist of the story, who, with the blood of the Treshams in his veins, will not stoop to the betrayal of the man who has trusted him. In the opening act, Mr. Harvey, who looks a strikingly picturesque figure, sounds the keynote of the character of Beresby by sufficiently suggesting the devil-may-care recklessness that belongs to it by the right of theatrical effectiveness. In the second act, where the lieutenant feigns drunkenness in order to circumvent his enemies, Mr. Harvey becomes a veritable swashbuckler in his behaviour, and the way "the Rat" in a few serious moments pots his enemies brings down the house. The best acting, however, is to be noted in the third act, where our hero is put to the test. The features of the actor—pale and drawn—are eloquent of the torture that the unfortunate lieutenant has undergone, and his attempt to kill himself rather than bear more agony brings down the curtain on a situation of intense interest. Mr. Harvey's triumphs, which are enthusiastically emphasised by his admirers at the termination of each act, are shared by Miss N. de Silva, whose Batty is as picturesque and poetic a figure as it was when The Breed of the Treshams was seen at the Adelphi in June, 1907. Mr. Charles Glenney handles the part of the mean-spirited traitor Colonel Clement Hungerford with his customary ability, the agitation of the guilty one being very clearly displayed during the third act. Mr. Philip Hewland is a duly stern and uncompromising Viscount Dorsington, and that great favourite of Lyceum audiences, Mr. Eric Mayne, for once doffing his mantle of stage villainy, wins our hearts by the virility and sunniness of his impersonation of Colonel Sir Henry Curwen. Mr. S. Major Jones is quite in the picture as Colonel Bagshaw; and Mr. Edward Combermere's Captain Stanhope lacks nothing in the effectiveness of its malignancy. Mr. Leonard Craske puts the necessary touch of lightness into his love scenes with the fair Mistress Margaret Hungerford, a part played with pathos and refreshing naturalness by Miss Brenda Gibson. The brutality and spite of Corporal Lumsford are capably realised by Mr. George Cooke; Mr. Percy Foster makes the most of his slender chances as Cornet Pit Keyton; and Messrs. Denholm Muir as Lieut. Willoughby, A. B. McKay as Corporal Saxton, B. A. Pittar as Will Lumsford, and A. Wilson as Jevons play small parts adequately. Miss Sybil Walsh as Helena Pierrepoint and Miss Bessie Elder as Mrs. Bagshaw add to what may be termed the feminine interest—not a strong feature of the play. The scenery, by G. J. Dodson, E. G. Banks, and R. McCleery, is a series of interesting interiors, which cleverly reflect the Stuart period, and the stage director, Mr. John Kurkamp, who is assisted by Mr. David Bain, may be complimented on the completeness of the production. Mr. Frank B. O'Neill is Mr. Harvey's courteous business manager, and the overture and incidental music by H. Darbey are well played by the orchestra under the direction of Mr. H. Sullivan Brooke.

THEATRE ROYAL, WOOLWICH.

"HIS DISHONOURED WIFE."

The author of the above thrilling piece, Mr. Harry Tilbury, is extremely funny as Micky Doolan, his scenes with Miss Etta Spalding as Araminta being ludicrous in the extreme; Mr. A. G. Fry as the village blacksmith, Frank Lindon, is a fine powerful actor, with a physique well suited to the part; in the title-rôle Miss Belle Tilbury is very sympathetic, and wins all hearts; as Lord Devant, "a disgrace to society," Mr. Alex. Alexander is a typical villain; as also is his companion in crime, Tom Redman, admirably enacted by Mr. Frank Orchard. Mr. Geo. Walkly is well placed as Geoffrey Harvey; Mr. A. S. Goring does well as Arthur Cooper; and Mr. Fred Owen makes the most of his opportunities as Nell Locksley, of Scotland Yard. Very prettily do little Violet and Grace Stafford enact the part of Mabel Lindon, the former in the early portion of the play, and the latter in the fourth act; Miss Arline T. George is sweet as Alice Harvey. The scenery is of the best and the effects are perfect.

THE SHAKESPEARE.

On Monday, June 27, the Play, in Four Acts, entitled

"SAPHO."

The above play, adapted from Daudet's celebrated novel by Miss Ada G. Abbott, and cleverly rendered by members of Mr. Ernest R. Abbott's company, is meeting with much success at the Shakespeare Theatre this week. The lighter side of Parisian life is well depicted, and the subject of the play has been skilfully treated, and was received by the audience with much favour on Monday evening. Miss Ada Abbott handled with tact and judgment the part of Sapho, whose moral wrong-doing was more than atoned for by her self-sacrifice in the end, and earnestly portrayed the changing moods of the woman who loved not wisely but too well. Miss Marjorie Tennant, although handicapped by a severe cold, did full justice to the part of Nichette, and Miss Ethel Tinsley made the most of Aunt Divonne. Miss Florence North was a pleasing Lucy, and Miss Gladys Annice as the young boy Joseph acquitted herself with credit. Miss Mary Douglas as Marie, Miss Rose Duncan as La Coriane, and Miss Nellie Ivinson as Marcelle also rendered good support. Mr. Edward Ouston gave a praiseworthy delineation of the young provincial, Jean Gaussin, and played the part in convincing style; Mr. Edwin Keene humorously enacted the rôle of the amorous Uncle Cesaire; Mr. Stephen Crossley did well as the felon, Flamant; Mr. John Drake as Henri Dechelette was effective; Mr. John Lester as Caoudal and Mr. W. H. Davis-Brown as Hettema contributed valuable assistance; Mr. Weedon Ross submitted a clever character sketch of Old Legrand; and the minor parts were capably sustained.

"THE FLAME."

Play, in One Act, by Marianne Stayton, Produced at the Shaftesbury Theatre on Thursday afternoon, June 30.

Mrs. Hallett ..... MISS HELEN LEYTON
Rose Hallett ..... MISS MARIANNE STAYTON
Jim Hallett ..... MR. HARRY WELCHMAN
A Young R.E. Officer ..... MR. ERIC MARRETTI
Captain Anderson, R.A. ..... MR. H. E. PEARCE

Marianne Stayton's play The Flame, produced at the National Service League Matinée at the Shaftesbury Theatre on Thursday afternoon, and the title allowed by the courtesy of Mr. Mark Perugini, is a strong and impressive little piece. The scene is the drawing-room of Mr. Hallett's country cottage during the supposed invasion of England. News is brought to Mrs. Hallett and Rose, his mother and wife, that things are going very badly with the English, and Rose especially is terrified at the thought that her husband, Jim Hallett, is in danger. The elder woman is more resigned, and tries to comfort Rose, but the latter admits that she doesn't think "the Flame" burns in her. She is overjoyed when her husband enters, and goes out to get him something to eat. Then his mother, wondering how it is he has returned, learns from him that he has been set a task and failed. He had allowed himself and his men to be trapped by the enemy by a ruse that any schoolboy should have seen. He himself has managed to escape, but he has decided that the only thing left for him to do is to blow his brains out. His mother implores him not to do this, but he sees no other way out of his disgrace. Just then a comrade is brought in, evidently badly wounded. He, too, has been given a task and failed—the blowing up of a tunnel which would mean certain death to anyone undertaking the work. He has been shot before he can accomplish it, and the enemy are rapidly advancing. In two hours reinforcements would arrive, and they would be able to hold them back. "It was my job—my job!" he moans, and then falls back dead. The conclusion may be guessed. Covering the body with his coat, Jim Hallett decides to take his place. There is a very harrowing scene of farewell between him and his wife, and as he goes out to certain death Rose falls fainting on the floor. The impressive little piece was powerfully acted throughout, Miss Helen Leyton being splendid as the calm, brave mother, Mrs. Hallett, quite resigned to losing her son fighting for his country, as his father had done before him. The anguish and anxiety of Rose were realistically portrayed by Miss Marianne Stayton, particularly intense being her acting in the scene where she learns of her husband's resolve; Mr. Harry Welchman skilfully realised the distress and utter hopelessness of the young officer, Jim Hallett; and Mr. Eric Marzetti's death scene was impressive, Mr. H. E. Pearce being admirable as Captain Anderson. The large and fashionable audience gave a very favourable hearing and reception to the play.

A delightful interlude in the programme was Mrs. Hilary Regrets, the amusing little comedy being perfectly played by Sir Charles Wyndham as the Irish doctor, Power, and Miss Dorothy Thomas as the young widow Blanche Hilary. Sir John Hare and the company supporting him also supplied another rare treat by their finished playing of A Quiet Rubber. Other popular artists down on the bill were Miss Cicely Courtneidge, in a song from The Arcadians, Mr. Albert Chevalier, Miss Florence Smithson, Mr. H. B. Irving, and Mme. Ada Crossley. A short address on the aims and objects of the League was given by Lord Willoughby de Broke, introduced to the audience by Earl Roberts, who thanked Mr. Courtneidge for lending the theatre, the artists for their services, and all who had worked in any capacity for the matinée, which should yield a substantial sum.

BRITISH EMPIRE SHAKESPEARE SOCIETY.

The annual elocution competition (final examination) of the above society was held on Monday afternoon in the Queen's Theatre, kindly lent by Mr. H. B. Irving. Mr. Irving also acted as judge, and as over forty students competed, each reciting two passages from the works of the Bard—comedy and serious—it may be guessed that his task was a very difficult and tiring one. Occupying the seat of judgment for something like three hours and a half, in giving his awards at the conclusion he promised the audience he wouldn't detain them long. They had had plenty of Shakespeare that afternoon—in fact, he doubted if they had ever had as much before. Remarking on the all-round level of excellence of the students and the extremely high elocutionary ability of nearly all of them, Mr. Irving said that in the circumstances he had to take dramatic force and understanding into consideration, and not judge them solely from an elocutionary standpoint. He hoped the students would be satisfied with his decisions, but he did not expect they all would, and he quite anticipated one of these days a great actress coming to him and reminding him that he had failed to recognise her talents as a student. In the class for juniors Mr. Irving gave the first prize to Miss Mabel George, a gifted young lady who was heard in passages from Julius Cæsar and A Midsummer Night's Dream, both selections reaching a high level of excellence, as regards both delivery of the lines and dramatic significance. Miss Dorothy Lemarchand (Juliet's Potion Scene and Viola's Soliloquy) was awarded second prize. In the amateur ladies' class Miss Clare Absolom gained the first prize, Miss Nellie Innes being second, Miss Constance Fairbairn, Miss Alice De Grey, Miss Lydia Loderhouse, and Miss Lilian Kirby being highly commended. First in the amateur gentlemen was Mr. A. C. Rickatson (excerpts from Henry V. and A Midsummer Night's Dream), Mr. James Sianners was second; Mr. Denchfield Baker and Mr. W. B. Thursfield being commended. In the professional class for ladies Miss Maud Hartley was awarded first prize for her impressive delivery of a passage from Macbeth, her selection from The Merchant of Venice also being admirably given; and Miss Florence Geere, in scenes from The Merchant of Venice and Julius Cæsar gained the second prize; Miss Madelinell Clayton being commended. Ability of a high order was shown by Mr. Horace Braham, first in the professional gentlemen class, passages from Richard III. and Much Ado About Nothing enabling him to display his versatility and undoubted aptitude for character acting. At the conclusion Miss Morritt, the hon. secretary of the society, proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Irving for his kindness in giving the use of his theatre, and also for acting as judge. This was seconded by Mr. Acton Bond, one of the directors and hon. treasurer, who also paid a tribute to the arduous work of Mr. Alan Mackinnon, Miss Esmé Beringer, and Mr. A. E. Drinkwater, the preliminary judges. Eleven more candidates than last year qualified in their respective centres to take part in the competition. In addition to candidates from the London centre, competitors came from the following branches of the Society:—Birmingham, Bristol, Cheltenham, Darlington, Ealing, Glasgow, Liverpool, New Cross, Norwood, Sheffield, and Stratford-on-Avon. In the previous preliminary examination in London there were twenty candidates more than last year in one class alone.

A PROFESSOR of Music at fifteen, Prof. Mario Lorenzi, who gave a harp recital at the house of Mrs. Mudie-Cooke, in Porchester-terrace, on Wednesday, began to play the harp when he was six years old. At the age of eight he performed at a concert of the Philharmonic Society of Florence.

"THE MAGNETIC GIRL."

Estrella Gomes ..... MISS OLIVIA ELTONE
Belle Lightfoot ..... MISS IVY MOORE
Mrs. Greythorn ..... MISS ETHEL CLARK

Albert Greythorn ..... MR. GERALD MIRRIELEES
Sir Victor de Bompas ..... MR. SAM LOCKRIDGE
Timothy de Bompas ..... MR. NORMAN CLARK
'Arry de Bompas ..... MR. EDWARD CARLTON
Emanuel Garcia ..... MR. ERIC BASS
Marx ..... MR. RICHARD TOMS
George Minshull ..... MR. FRANKLYN BELLAMY

The above play was first produced at Weston-super-Mare on June 6 last, and has met with great success since. It is full of rollicking fun from start to finish. The play opens in the garden of the El Dorado Hotel, where the three members of the De Bompas family are much exercised in their minds as to which is to marry Estella Gomes or forfeit a fortune. Unknown to her three suitors, however, Estrella is already engaged to George Minshull, who is really a De Bompas, his father changing his name on going to America years before. Estrella carries a magnetic battery, as she suffers from "nerves," and anyone she comes in contact with receives a violent shock, much merriment being caused thereby.

In order to obtain an increased allowance from his millionaire uncle, Sir Victor, one of the three suitors, has persuaded his cousin, Mrs. Greythorn, to pose as his wife. Mr. Greythorn has disguised himself as the French maid of the music-hall artist, Belle Lightfoot, whom he has already introduced to his uncle as Lady de Bompas, the uncle being mystified as to which lady he has previously met. Belle Lightfoot takes a snapshot of the millionaire uncle flirting with Sir Victor's imaginary wife, and he being the head of a missionary society in New York offers a fabulous sum for the photo, under the threat of having it reproduced at a picture show next door to his mission-hall. The act concludes with Estrella taken with violent hysterics, and emitting sparks from her battery, shocking everyone who comes near.

In Act 3 George Minshull procures the papers giving him proof of his birth, but, like "Brer Rabbit," "lays low." The three De Bompas's discuss the subject of which of them is to marry Estrella, but are suddenly confronted with the news (arranged between Estrella and Belle Lightfoot) that the French maid (Greythorn) is the real heiress. The cousins thereon decline to marry the real Estrella, and thus forfeit the fortune to her. George Minshull produces the proofs of his birth as a De Bompas, which a lawyer cousin has procured. Belle, who has received a handsome cheque from the uncle, marries Sir Victor, Estrella being wedded to the man she loves, and thus claiming the fortune.

As Estrella Miss Olivia Eltone is simply charming, acting her part to perfection. Extremely clever is Miss Ivy Moore as Belle Lightfoot, who causes no end of fun. Miss Ethel Clark is capital as Mrs. Greythorn, her scenes with the millionaire uncle, well realised by Mr. William Clark, being very funny. Mr. Gerald Mirrielees as the flightly Albert Greythorn is a host in himself. The three members of the De Bompas family extract a large amount of fun from their parts. Mr. Franklyn Bellamy is particularly well placed as George Minshull; and the other members of the company acquit themselves capably.

There was also produced, at the same theatre on the same day, a drama, in one act, by Hilda Smithson, entitled

"THE PASSING OF SINCLAIR."

Laura Sinclair ..... MISS EILEEN MARTIN
Roland Sinclair ..... MR. GERALD MIRRIELEES
Linlater ..... MR. ERIC BASS

This is a pathetic little playlet of everyday life, in which the principal person sacrifices love for duty.

Sinclair, after a quarrel with his wife, decides that, owing to incompatibility of temper, it is impossible to live with her any longer, and although the fault is entirely on his side, he deserts her and leaves for Australia. Left alone, without home or friends, she succeeds in obtaining a situation as housekeeper to an eminent brain specialist, Dr. Eric Roxburgh, F.R.C.S., who, struck with her manner and appearance, falls in love with her, but says nothing of his passion, until by chance he reads in a newspaper of a man's body being found in Sydney and identified as that of Sinclair.

As a result of this news he resolves to propose marriage to his housekeeper, and upon showing her the proofs of her husband's demise, she accepts the doctor's offer. The servant, Linlater, enters with the news that a terrible motor-car accident has happened outside the house, and that a man, seriously injured, has been brought into an adjoining room. On seeing the patient, the doctor immediately recognises him as Sinclair from a photo of her husband which has been shown him by his housekeeper. If the man lives, the doctor cannot marry the woman he loves, and he is tempted to let the sufferer take his chance; but the scientific side of his character prevails, and he decides to save Sinclair's life. Whilst he is breaking the news to his housekeeper, Sinclair recovers consciousness, and endeavours to realise his whereabouts. He enters the room where the doctor and Mrs. Sinclair are, misunderstands the situation, and from the effect of excitement falls dead at their feet. This leaves the woman free; the doctor renews his proposal, and she accepts him.

As the noble-minded Dr. Eric Roxburgh Mr. Sam Lockridge was a distinct success, his natural and refined acting being greatly admired. Mr. Gerald Mirrielees as the jealous, excitable, ill-tempered Roland Sinclair was excellent. As the servant, Linlater, Mr. Eric Bass did well; and the deserted wife, Laura Sinclair, was ably enacted by Miss Eileen Martin, her variation of moods, now passionate, appealing, now sympathetic and subdued, being extremely clever. The play was particularly well received, and the authoress appeared and bowed her acknowledgments.

On Monday, June 27, the Drama entitled

"HER FATAL PAST."

Mr. T. Edward Ward's company is making a good show. Miss Ward fills the title-rôle, Honor Symes, in most able style, sustaining the tone of her character perfectly throughout some difficult scenes; Leonard Fernside is well interpreted by Mr. Harry Emmerson; Mr. Charles Yorke makes an excellent Gilbert Fernside, the heavy lead suiting him well; Mark Desmond is placed wisely in Mr. Bernard Elliott's hands; Mr. T. Edward Ward as Jonathan Buckstone Nobbs supplies a welcome comic element. The very amusing and agreeable part of Dicky Bird is allotted to Mr. H. Macauley, who justifies the choice; Miss Emilie Entwistle as Little Leonard deserves considerable praise for the crisp way in which she plays her part; Miss Gabrielle Romero as Belle de Lara is imposing; Ruth Fernside is aptly played by Miss Fannie M. Wellesley; and Miss Kate Newman is good as Sal Jenkins. The remaining parts are capably sustained, viz., Reuben Treadway by Mr. Claude Page, Constable Smithers by Mr. Wilfrid Smith, Kitty Sprigwell by Miss Clarrie Yandell, and Martha Sprigwell by Miss Esmai Ellys.

Originally produced as a play at Worthing a few years ago, The Pigeon House has now been set to music by Eric Hope (the nom-de-plume of the Earl of Yarmouth), and transformed into a delightfully captivating musical comedy. The audience privileged to be present at the first production on Monday night was undoubtedly charmed by the performance, and nothing but praise was heard on all sides.

The plot is not intricate, and is agreeably interspersed by clever musical items. The first act is set in the apartment of a lawyer, Paul Bouchard, who, endowed with a youthful and light-hearted spirit, has removed from the solitude of his sister's dwelling to gayer and more frequented quarters. Here he is visited by the husband of his ward, Captain Victor de Meneval, who desires the lawyer to advance him the necessary wherewithal to meet liabilities incurred through numerous visits to a café chantant called "The Pigeon House." As security, the Captain leaves his wife's diamond necklace, valued at 20,000 francs, explaining that, in order to avoid arousing the suspicions of his wife, he has replaced a paste replica of the necklace. He is followed by Mme. Leontine de Meneval, who, although imagined by her husband to be a model wife as regards expenditure of her allowance, is, as a matter of fact, heavily in debt for various costumes and millinery. Mme. Leontine submits her necklace to the lawyer as her security for an advance, not being aware that her husband has substituted paste for the genuine stones. Bouchard exchanges the necklaces, telling madame that the one she now has is paste, whereas in reality she has the diamonds. The lawyer's next visitor is a captivating widow he has met by chance on a previous occasion, and this lady secures the necklace and carries it away under the impression that it is of great value.

Act II. finds the several parties assembling at the Pigeon House Restaurant without the others' knowledge. Captain and Mme. de Meneval are there together, and Bouchard with the widow. The former couple watch the lawyer flirting with his companion, and the Captain is surprised to find his wife's necklace on the lawyer's acquaintance. When she is alone he confronts her with the fact, and demands the return of the trinket. The widow manages to get de Meneval taken away by two gendarmes as insane, and, after extracting Bouchard's pocket-book, with his notes, effects a speedy exit. De Meneval is released, but Bouchard is nearly carried off by the gendarmes through being unable to pay his account for supper, &c.

Act III. opens in Victor de Meneval's rooms, and his wife enters, to find supper laid, with bouquets on the table addressed to the four dancers of "The Pigeon House." Victor eventually appears in the midst of the four ladies, but his wife joins them all at supper and astonishes de Meneval by her gay and frivolous spirits and her frequent resort to the champagne-cup. After considerably shocking her husband Mme. Leontine eventually confesses she has only been acting to cure him of his flirting propensities, and that she has been drinking nothing stronger than ginger ale. The widow appears in the midst of the reconciliation, by appointment, to receive 2,000 francs in return for the paste necklace and her silence on behalf of the lawyer, but has to make her exit discomfited.

The part of Leontine de Meneval is in the hands of Miss Thelma Raye, whose acting throughout is light, vivacious, and clever, while her musical numbers are rendered in charming style. "Kitty, kitty, cat" and "Cigarette" are two of her most pleasing songs, the latter being particularly pretty. The author is undeniably successful in the part of Victor de Meneval; Mr. O. E. Lennon is well suited as Paul Bouchard, his animated appearance and mannerisms making his portrayal greatly amusing; Mr. A. Wellton Fordham as Major Fallieres has many opportunities in which to show to advantage his capital voice, his rendering of "Life of a soldier" being one of the most successful items of the piece; Miss Olive May as the widow, Mme. Vernet, acquits herself creditably of her responsibilities; Mr. Trefor Davies does well in the rôle of Pierre; and Mrs. Snead Davies as Mlle. Bouchard and Miss Julia Sylvestre as Elise are to be congratulated upon excellent interpretations. The chorus work is extremely well done.

Prolonged applause awaited the conclusion of the piece. The author, in a few words, acknowledged the hearty reception accorded to the play.

PASTORAL PLAY AT CRYSTAL PALACE.

The grassy glades in the grounds of the Sydenham pleasure house formed a fitting frame for Mr. Patrick Kirwan's répertoire company in Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream, although the weather of late has not been the kind for out of door plays, and the damp grass did not make an ideal reclining place for the players; but, notwithstanding these disadvantages, the representation went merrily, and was well received by quite a good audience.

Mr. Kirwan as Bottom, the weaver, was excellent throughout, his scenes with Titania being full of humour, and Miss Rosamund Mayne Young as Helena gave a most telling and dramatic rendering of this tearful part. Mr. P. Gedge Tyman's fine presence gave distinction to the part of Lysander, and he acted well and naturally; and Mr. Stanley Roberts as Demetrius was satisfactory. The Hermia of Miss Mary Allistree was well conceived, and one could not desire a more charming exponent of the part. Mr. J. A. M. Napper as Oberon made a fine and dignified fairy king; and Miss Daisy Smith as Titania was light and dainty. Miss Alys Rees was an energetic sprite, her appearances causing great amusement.

Mr. Kirwan received the very best support from the gentlemen enacting the Athenian amateurs. Mr. Alfred Ibberson as Quince had a most diverting stammer, of which he made the very best use; and we would also especially mention the Flute of Everard Vanderlip as being a rich bit of comedy acting, and the make-up and dressing of this group was altogether good.

The music, which is such a feature of this production, was well rendered, Mr. Godfrey's band giving Mendelssohn's well-known overture in fine style, and the incidental vocal music was ably rendered by an invisible choir of ladies.

ACTORS' DAY.

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING.

The existence of the Actors' Day Fund was well justified at the annual meeting, held at the Duke of York's Theatre on Monday afternoon. Steady progress has been made with the movement, and the report and financial accounts show that good work has been accomplished.

Story Gofton, H. A. Saintsbury, Walter Selby, James C. Taylor, Acton Bond, Henry Kitts, Cecil Barth, Chas. Seymour, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Braithwaite, Miss Eugenie Kemble, Miss Georgina Hamilton, and Mr. A. E. Drinkwater, hon. secretary.

The minutes of the previous annual meeting were read and confirmed.

The secretary read the report and submitted the account of receipts and payments from Oct. 1, 1908, to Sept. 30, 1909.

A. G. SAYERS,
Chartered Accountant, Hon. Auditor.
19, Hanover-square, London, W.
Dec. 15, 1909.

"The Organising Committee, in presenting the balance-sheet for the year, have the satisfaction of reporting that, while the Fund depends entirely on the contributors themselves, the receipts for the year were £109 8s. 3d. in excess of all grants and loans, less amounts repaid, and all expenses. The capital of the Fund was thus increased from £841 7s. 3d. to £950 15s. 6d. Owing to sickness and other urgent causes a large number of applications (about one out of every nine contributors) were received for the benefits of the Fund. Every application was promptly dealt with, and the Committee were able to render assistance of the utmost value. A substantial part of the loans granted has already been repaid. No expenses beyond actual necessities were incurred. The committee and the hon. secretary gratefully acknowledge the valuable help gratuitously rendered by Mr. Burton Cooke, which has enabled them again, as in past years, to confine the cost of the clerical work to the temporary services of a shorthand clerk at the time of the Annual Collection. The committee also offer their best thanks to the honorary auditor."

In answer to questions the secretary said the sum of £60 odd was not the whole amount paid in grants and loans, but was less by the sums repaid, some of which were advanced in former years. Some were not loans at all, but actual grants. A substantial part of the £60 referred to had been repaid since the termination of the year. With regard to the loans outstanding he did not think they were hopeless. In some cases loans were repaid after a very long time.

Moving the adoption of the report, the CHAIRMAN said the amounts not repaid were very small considering the numbers they had helped. The books of the loans repaid were very interesting and very satisfactory reading, and ought to make them very proud of their profession. In many cases people had borrowed fair amounts and had paid back the whole in small sums like 5s. That was a satisfactory feature of the Fund. The fact that they were a little stronger than last year was another source of congratulation, as showing that they were going forward. If only they could persuade more of their fellow-actors to join the Fund, and go on increasing in strength, they would be able to build up a big fund, which it was a gratification to feel they were able to maintain themselves. (Hear, hear.) The sacrifice they made yearly was one night's earnings, and they did not get any advertisement out of it. Some of the members of the profession gave largely to funds if they got an advertisement out of it; but when it came to giving one night's salary, the amount of which was not stated, they hesitated. The Fund did not want those people. So long as they got a certain number of good men together they need not fear for the future of the Fund. (Cheers.)

In reply to Mr. CHRIS. WALKER, the chairman said there were some old members who had dropped out. There were a few at first who joined with the idea of paying in one night's salary, and having got their loan, promptly drop out. Those people were more or less confined to the first year.

The SECRETARY said the number of those who contributed every year was greatly increasing. The fact that they were getting stronger would make people think there was something in it. The number of contributors, he added, was just under three hundred.

Mr. ACTON BOND asked whether every opportunity was taken to make known the good the Fund was doing, because in one or two instances it had been of the utmost value, and if this were made more generally known, they would have less difficulty in getting subscriptions.

The CHAIRMAN replied that they did not feel entitled to spend a great deal of the Fund's money in advertisements; they relied more upon the recipients themselves to make their cases known. If they gave specific cases of benefits conferred it might lead to identification, and that was just what they wanted to avoid.

Mr. BOND suggested that the annual meeting should be held nearer the time of the collection, before the enthusiasm raised had evaporated. They were a self-help society, and they should do everything possible to force it and make it stronger.

The SECRETARY said the meeting was fixed at a date to allow of the preparation of the accounts for their financial year, which ended in September. They could, however, be accelerated so as to come nearer the date of collection.

Mr. SAINTSBURY suggested that the number of people who had been helped from the beginning should be stated, showing how much money had been put in circulation for the benefit of the profession.

After further discussion, a resolution, proposed by Mr. BOND, and seconded by Mr. WALKER, that the annual meeting be held between the end of the financial year and the date of the collection—Oct. 21—was carried unanimously.

The following members of the Advisory Committee, who retired by rotation, were re-elected:—Messrs. Henry Ainley, Blake Adams, Cecil Barth, C. T. H. Helmsley, Laurence Irving, Walter Maxwell, and Brandon Thomas. Mr. BARTH on behalf of himself and Mr. Thomas, thanked the meeting for their re-election.

The CHAIRMAN said there were two points to which he would draw attention, and which the committee were rather exercised about. When a member joined the Fund and contributed his night's salary for the first time, he might be in difficulties shortly after and apply for a loan. The genuine cases they were only too anxious to help, but they had had cases in which a man had contributed one night's salary with the idea of having a loan and letting it go at that. They wanted to fix a limit to the amount such a person is allowed in order to prevent any such men from drawing a loan after the first year's contribution and then dropping out of it. They wanted to make a distinction between the applications of those members in their first year, and those who had been longer on the books. During the Fund's first year they met with the impostors he alluded to, individuals having a loan and never repaying either that or any more subscriptions. There was very little of that going on in subsequent years; but they wanted to be prepared for the contingency. He asked for suggestions to guide the committee. The other point he wished to refer to was that of another type of case—that in which a man contributed once and then let two or three years go by without renewing his subscription, and then finding things going "rocky," sent up a big contribution. It was not right that such people should be in the same position as those who had contributed all through. If a member did not contribute, and did not take the trouble to give any explanation, and went on for a number of years, that man should cease to be a member, but that was rather a drastic method.

Miss HAMILTON suggested that a fine should be imposed, but the chairman pointed out that it would be difficult to fix a sum, as no one knew the amount contributed by any member. That circumstance put all the members on an equality. It was an absolute essential of the Fund that the amount of a member's contribution was not known even to the trustees, the contributions being collected by the acting-manager of the theatre or company, and forwarded in bulk. Each contributor was supplied with receipts in the shape of stamps, which acted as a check on the manager.

A member said he had not received stamps or any other acknowledgment for his contribution.

The SECRETARY said the method worked perfectly where the acting-manager fell in with the requirements, but he had great difficulty in getting them to do so. One of the company was appointed to collect all the stamps and forward them to the secretary, who would send each member a receipt for one night's salary without any amount being mentioned. If the member who had made the complaint would walk round to the office after the meeting, he could show him the counterfoil of the receipt alluded to. The form sent to the actor-managers was simplicity itself, but instead of getting the form returned properly filled in he often got a statement that "So-and-So" had contributed, but got no addresses. In that case they sent to the acting-manager and asked him to distribute the receipts.

Miss HAMILTON thought there was rather too much sentiment about the administration of the Fund. It was very unbusinesslike that people should be able to send up a small salary and then be able to demand a sum as large as he who had paid a big figure.

The CHAIRMAN explained that the Fund was not an insurance company; if it were, there would be legal restrictions to contend with.

On the suggestion of Mr. WALKER, the matter was left over to the next general meeting, so that members might consider it in the intervening period.

The CHAIRMAN proposed a vote of thanks to the hon. secretary. Mr. Drinkwater, he said, worked very hard indeed for the Fund, the number of people he had to deal with being remarkable.

The resolution was seconded by Mr. STORY-GOFTON, and heartily endorsed.

Mr. DRINKWATER, in acknowledgment, said it was a great pleasure to him to have the administration of the Fund so far as it lay in the secretary's hands, and he was deeply interested in its future. If they could only make the profession realise what the Fund was and did, he was certain it would grow by leaps and bounds. He would go on doing his best, and hoped to leave the Fund on a firm basis.

Mr. BURTON COOKE, who also received the thanks of the meeting, said the Fund was a great scheme that ought to be supported by the whole profession. It was not a charity, but a fund for those people who liked to put a little away for a rainy day. It had been rumoured that some of them who were working for the Fund were getting something out of it. (Laughter.) He must say that Mr. Drinkwater was looking very fit on what he was getting out of the Fund. He was giving up his time and getting nothing for it but hard work. (Hear, hear.)

Votes of thanks to Mr. Valentine and the Advisory Board, and to Mr. Chas. Frohman and Miss Gertrude Elliott and Messrs. Liebler for the loan of the theatre, concluded the meeting.

FOSTER—BROGDEN WEDDING.

Mr. Basil S. Foster, the well-known Worcestershire cricketer and member of The Dollar Princess company, in which he plays the part of the Earl of Quorn, was married on Wednesday last at the Roman Catholic Church, Spanish-place, to Miss Gwendolene Brogden, who played Cinderella in Pinkie and the Fairies. Our photograph shows the bride and bridegroom leaving the church.

At the twentieth annual meeting of the Torquay Theatre Company, held on the 17th ult., the directors reported that the total receipts on the trading account had been £8,513 16s. 2d., and the expenditure £7,876 16s. 9d., leaving a profit balance of £637 18s. 5d. to be carried to the net revenue account. The balance available for dividend was £1,378 0s. 6d., and the directors recommended the payment of a dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. The trading account showed that cash at doors, bookings, &c., amounted to £8,370 17s. 4d., as compared with £8,968 3s. 3d. in the previous year; £5,219 1s. 10d. had been paid to the theatrical companies, as compared with £5,633 1s. 1d.; salaries and wages absorbed £1,300 4s., as against £1,323 6s. 5d. The profit was about £200 less than the previous year.

THE Chairman, Mr. W. H. Mortimer, in moving the adoption of the report, said that whilst he could congratulate the shareholders on a fairly successful year, he had to report a decrease of nearly £600 in receipts under the heading of cash at doors and bookings. There was no doubt that the general election was mainly responsible for the falling off, for up to that time they were in quite as good a position as in the previous year. After the election two or three companies, which had been booked, and which would probably have drawn fair houses, at least, cancelled their engagements, and other companies had had to be substituted without much choice on the part of the directors. The accounts showed that the visiting companies were the principal losers, £414 less than the previous year having been paid to them. The resolution was unanimously accepted.

THE ACTOR'S CHANCES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—Your leading article of the 18th ult., under the heading of "The Actor's Anxiety," with its just and discouraging picture of the theatrical underworld, where artists of capacity often live unmeritedly obscure lives, appears, nevertheless, I should like to suggest, at a moment when there is a faint indication of a turn towards better times for the actor.

The drama itself—the written drama—has already begun to lift its head, and its revival has been impulsed from within, as all regenerations are, and the nucleus of vitality of which it consists has already acquired a financial backing, and is appreciably attracting a favourable and supporting public opinion. It is the strength of the drama that is giving it a new position; the fact that it offers real value and vitality which, in the end, must appeal; and it is on this basis of a reversion to higher quality that the interpretive craft, too, shows signs of wrestling successfully with its desperate condition.

As your article indicates, the expedient of informing public opinion as to professional affairs is doubtless good strategy, but the information to be conveyed is not of disabilities or evils, but of merit that will give value for support of the presentiment of high virtue, such as the drama has exhibited. That seems the only appeal—and perhaps the only just appeal—that will bring aid. This presentiment has already begun in an outward and obvious form, not only in London, where the Repertory Theatre offered a general, as opposed to a particular, high level of performance, but in provincial centres as well. These exhibitions of a general high level of talent, however, must go to the credit of the drama that will not tolerate anything else. They cannot be claimed yet by the profession as indicative of its own inward general regeneration.

The drama has been revivified because some of the potent literary intellect of the age has turned its attention to the theatre and works largely in stage form. Intellect is very self-conscious, and so the drama is no longer blind or groping, without power to discern its aims or capabilities. Nor is it dumb and unable to answer its antagonists; but on all hands it sees pretty clearly its ideals, its outline, limits, its merits, claims, aspirations, and stands four square and strong. The regeneration of the actor's calling will work—indeed, is working—along the same lines.

The supreme artist always does, and doubtless always has, worked his way out into self-consciousness, but the general intellectual level of the profession being raised of late years, self-consciousness—and consequently strength and order—is becoming more common among the majority; a greater number are at that altitude of mind wherefrom they are enabled to perceive their own psychology, and can discern some of the principles of their artistry and the general scope, capacity, outline, and laws which govern what used to be, more or less, blindly undertaken work. It is not likely to be suggested, of course, that the high flights of any artistry are not, on the whole, blind actions governed by inexplicable intuition, but long and conscious practice of first principles most certainly underlies the most effective spontaneous abandonment that can be achieved, and it is the knowledge of these first principles that is becoming more widely distributed and ceasing to be the exclusive possession of the few whose inherent attainments have carried them to knowledge, but who, hitherto, have seen fit to be almost silent on the matter.

The illusion that stage interpretation is accomplished chiefly by some sort of haphazard emotionalism has been the most potent cause of the present overstocking of the professional ranks with inappropriate material. The few talented artists always have known how futile the illusion is, and it is because an ever-increasing nucleus—chiefly, just now, gathered round the new managements—is awakening to the same self-consciousness of distinct and guided artistry, that the outlook for the future—doubtless, so slow do revolutions move—the far future, is not entirely without hope of betterment.

When the actor clearly sees himself as he is—his exact relation to the author—the curious, inspiring, and unassailable position that he holds in the dramatic scheme, he will be revivified with the inspiration of a new ideal of workmanship which, though its roots are deep planted in seriousness, in renunciation and hard work, is yet impulsed with finer exaltations than the ideals of easy living that have of recent years guided the majority of aspirants; and by the acquirement of the higher truths about his art he will be enabled to defend it, and, publicly and privately, to support and enforce its inherent value and dignity. In this way alone will public sympathy be enlisted.

As an aid to this end, and as a means of making itself vital and of real power, the Actors' Association might seek to institute lectures and addresses on technique, training, and the fundamentals of capacity and ideals, by eminent members of the profession, by dramatists and critics, and to encourage discussion and a literature on the subject. This will help to rouse the only spirit tending towards unity and concerted action that perhaps ever animated any artistic community, the inherent and ineradicable scorn and detestation of the vital artistic nature towards insincerity, fatuity, incompetence, and the rest of the vices of the dilettante. Samson needs to pull down the temple of ease that the private income has erected (the income is still needed but with other activities), and by self-sought enlightenment and self-consciousness, in a few years the profession, like the drama, revivified from within, may deserve and be entitled (which it is not now) to the protection of public opinion which will help to conserve its best energies and give it a new start.—Yours faithfully,

BREMBER WILLS.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

An orchestral and choral memorial concert for the founder of the Royal College was given on Wednesday evening under the conductorship of Sir Charles V. Stanford. Bach's Trauer-Ode, "Lass, König, lass noch einen Strahl," came first in the programme, the text being adapted for this occasion by Mr. A. G. Haltenhoff. In the Trauer-Ode the chorus sang well and produced a full rich tone, while the soloists, Miss Agnes Christa, Miss Matilda Bodycombe, Mr. Ivor Walters, and Mr. George Baker displayed intelligence, although somewhat faulty in their German; in this respect the alto and bass were most successful and also vocally. Brahms' beautiful Rhapsody for Contralto, male voices and orchestra, Op. 53, was admirably sung by Miss Florence Taylor, the male voices and orchestra blending in fine effect with Miss Taylor's pure-toned contralto voice. An interesting note in the programme states that at the first private performance of the Rhapsody at Mme. Schumann's house, with the composer at the piano, the late Mme. Pauline Viardot-Garcia sang the solo part. The orchestra gave an interesting and fairly correct rendering of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, No. 3, in E flat, the large audience standing during the Marcia Funebre, and Brahms' Schicksalslied "Song of Destiny" concluded the concert.

"THE PRINCESS."

A Pastoral Play, in Five Acts, adapted from Tennyson's Poem, Produced in the Grounds of Ashburton House, Putney Heath, on Saturday, June 25.

King Gama	MR. ROBINSON
The King of the Northern Empire	MR. JACK POTTER
Florian	MR. RIVINGTON
Cyril	MR. DIGBY
Arac	MR. CLIFFORD J. ST. QUINTIN
First Twin Brother	MR. F. M. SKELT
Second Twin Brother	MR. S. C. SKELT
Princess Ida	MISS COLVILLE
Lady Blanche	MISS PHYLLIS MAYHEW
Lady Psyche	MISS PALEY
Melissa	MISS WEBSTER-JONES

Organised for the purpose of benefiting the funds of St. Mary's Church Schools at Putney and the Japanese Seamen's Institute, E., the performances of Tennyson's The Princess at Putney, on Saturday, deserved better treatment at the hands of the Clerk of the Weather. Through the kindness of Mr. Charrington the fine old mansion and the lovely grounds surrounding it had been secured for the two performances, which it was intended should have been given in the open, but the weather was so unpropitious in the afternoon that the play had to be presented indoors. The weather conditions, however, were so improved in the evening that it was possible for the second performance to be given on the spacious lawn at the rear of the house, and it was voted by all who witnessed it as a great artistic success. Mr. Fewlass Llewellyn, who undertook the production of the play, has had a large experience in such ventures. Part author of The Coal King and of A Gentleman of England, and one of the teachers at the Ben Greet Academy of Acting, Mr. Llewellyn, threw himself into the work of rehearsal with so much energy that the whole of the numerous company engaged in the play made creditable appearances and the principal parts were presented with conspicuous ability. Mr. Robinson made a most capable King Gama, and succeeded in extracting a good deal of humour from the part. Mr. Jack Potter as the King of the Northern Empire, was also a success, speaking and acting his lines with much acceptance. A remarkably fine performance was given by Mr. Gaffagan as the Prince, his efforts receiving particularly favourable notice. Miss Colville as the Princess also won favourable notice for the grace and ease with which she filled the part. Mr. Rivington as Florian was also very good. The make-up of Mr. F. M. Skelt and of Mr. S. C. Skelt as the twin brothers of the Princess was clever, and each gave a most creditable impersonation. Mr. Clifford St. Quintin was a fine soldierly Arac, Miss Phyllis Mayhew scored a success as the elderly Lady Blanche, and Miss Webster-Jones won admiration by her impersonation of Melissa, her singing and dancing being particularly admired. Great care had been bestowed upon the dressing of the play, which in this respect was beyond reproach, and the incidental music was capably performed by the Woodborough Orchestra of a dozen performers. In the course of the performance Miss Webster-Jones sang "Tears, idle tears" and "Now sleeps the crimson petal." Miss Gay (who filled a subordinate part) warbled "The splendour falls," and Mr. Gaffagan sang "Oh, swallow, swallow." The singing and the dancing were accompanied alternately by Mrs. St. Quintin and Miss Elfrida Paley.

The Princess was played again on Monday night at the Memorial Hall, Kensington-place, the weather again interfering with its presentation in the grounds of Aubrey House, Campden Hill. There was a distinguished gathering, including the Japanese Ambassador.

THE BEECHAM OPERA SEASON.

Mozart's Cosi fan Tutte (They all do it), performed at His Majesty's Theatre on Monday night, completed the operas of Mozart in Mr. Thomas Beecham's highly successful Mozart festival. In the story of Cosi fan Tutte, two Neapolitan officers, betrothed to the sisters Isidora and Dorabella, have a wager with a crusty old bachelor, Alfonso, who does not believe in woman's constancy, that they will prove their ladies true. The wager is accepted, under the condition the young officers will place themselves entirely in Alfonso's hands, and act as he directs. After the lovers have taken leave of Isidora and Dorabella, they shortly reappear disguised as rich Albanians, and, with the help of Despina, waiting-maid of the ladies, who enters into the plot by order of Alfonso, introduce the supposed Albanians to the sisters. The gentlemen make love to Isidora and Dorabella, but without any success. In the second attempt, the two Albanians pretend to poison themselves; but, although the ladies are alarmed, the ruse does not make any impression. Determined not to fail, Alfonso gets the maid to persuade the sisters that constancy is quite out of fashion, and men may be treated with far greater freedom. This, coming from one of their own sex, influences the ladies, and they receive with favour the Albanians. Alfonso, of course, wins the wager, but as his only object was to give the lovers a lesson, he helps in clearing up the matter, and all ends well.

Slight as the subject of the opera is, it afforded Mozart ample opportunities for some charming music. The lovely trio at the end of the first act, the lovers' farewell, and the duet sung by Isidora and Dorabella, are all fine examples of the great composer's genius. The performance was excellent and full of spirit. Miss Ruth Vincent and Miss Lena Maitland as the two sisters sang and acted admirably, Miss Vincent being particularly successful in Isidora's florid aria in the third act. Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Frederic Austin as the lovers acted and sang well, and entered into the lively situations with animation. Mr. Lewys James was successful as the old bachelor; and Miss Beatrice la Palme gave a capital impersonation of the scheming maid. The finale of the second act was beautifully sung; while for refinement and finish the orchestral playing, under Mr. Beecham's skilful direction, could not be improved upon.

JUDGMENT was delivered in the Glasgow High Court on the 21st ult., in the case of the young Italian, Augustus Cinque, who was charged with having, on May 4, in the Theatre Royal, Glasgow, discharged a loaded revolver at John M'Kay, an attendant of the theatre, seriously wounding him. The judge said that all the evidence went to show that the revolver had been deliberately discharged. There was no evidence to show that it was not deliberately aimed at M'Kay, and every evidence that it was aimed in his direction. If a man aimed a shot in the direction of a person and that person was struck, it was only reasonable to conclude that the shot was aimed at the person. He agreed with the Advocate-Depute that the fact that the accused was under the influence of drink did not lessen but increased the responsibility attaching to the act. A fire-arm in the hands of a person in that condition was a much greater menace to public safety.

AFTER a brief retirement, the jury unanimously found the prisoner guilty. In passing sentence, Lord Salvesen commented on the seriousness of the crime. It was not, at the same time, premeditated. The prisoner was a young man engaged in earning an honest livelihood. The sentence would be one of fifteen months' imprisonment, and he would grant an order under the Aliens Act for the expulsion of the accused from the country after he had served his sentence.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

Sir Herbert Tree, who since his return from his provincial tour has been actively rehearsing the autumn production of Shakespeare's King Henry VIII., has decided on Thursday, Sept. 1, as the date of the opening performance.

Sir John Hare is a distinguished addition to Mr. Charles Frohman's répertoire company, and will make his reappearance on the London stage next year. Sir John will be seen in plays with which his name is already associated, but not in The Gay Lord Quex or A Pair of Spectacles, as he bade farewell to them during his short season at the Garrick in the autumn of 1908. Neither will the eminent actor again play in Manchester, Liverpool, or any of the big provincial cities, having made his farewells in those important dramatic centres two years ago.

The last rites over the remains of the late Mr. Henry Neville were performed at Christ Church, Denshaw, near Oldham, on the 24th ult. The lamented actor was well known in the district, his mother having resided for a considerable time at Wood Brow, Denshaw, situated at the foot of the Yorkshire moors. The church was endowed by his mother and sister, who are interred in the family vault.

The funeral cortège, which had journeyed from London, reached Oldham about 1.30, and proceeded to Denshaw, arriving at the church at half-past two. The vicar conducted the funeral service, after which the party proceeded to the vault, where the body was laid to rest. The coffin was of polished oak, bearing a plate inscribed "Henry Gartside Neville. Died June 19, in his 74th year." The only mourners were the deceased's brother, Mr. Fred Neville, his sons, Mr. Albert, Mr. Willoughby, and Mr. Ernest Neville, and his nephew, Mr. Henry Neville. A list of wreaths and floral tributes sent in great variety and bearing affectionate inscriptions was given in our last issue.

Miss Lena Ashwell, with the object of stimulating the work of unknown British dramatists, will during the forthcoming visit of her company to Harrogate produce on one date a play written by a local playwright. The play is to be selected by a committee of residents in Harrogate, formed by Mr. William Peacock, managing-director at the Opera House, to whom manuscripts must be sent in on or before July 14. The plays are to be restricted to six characters, and the actual time of representation is not to exceed thirty minutes. In the production the author will have the assistance of Mr. H. Ralph Kempton (late stage director of the Scottish Repertory Theatre).

Mr. H. B. Irving, some three weeks ago, accepted for production a play, dramatised by Mr. George Pleydell from Mr. A. E. W. Mason's novel, "Clementina." Mr. Irving will be seen in the historical character of the hero, Charles Wogan, whose rescue of the Princess Clementina forms the background of Mr. Mason's highly popular novel—a part of a kind which is quite a new departure for Mr. Irving. Madame Liza Lehmann has composed some special music for the play. The scenery for an elaborate production is in hand, and Mr. Tom Heslewood has been commissioned to design the costumes. The present season at the Queen's Theatre wil conclude to-night, when Mr. Irving will act Lesurques and Dubosc in The Lyons Mail for the 166th time in London.

Mr. Herbert Sleath, by arrangement with Messrs. Walter and Frederick Melville, will shortly appear at the Lyceum in a revival of A White Man, which was produced at the Lyric by Mr. Lewis Waller, and has since been toured by Mr. Sleath with great success in the provinces. At the Lyceum he will appear as the chivalrous hero, Captain Wynnegate. Mr. Eric Mayne, Mr. Frederick Ross, Mr. W. F. Grant, and Mr. W. Brandon will also be in the cast.

Mr. Hermann Vezin, the actor, who died on June 12, left estate of the gross value of £137, with net personalty nil. The testator left all of his property upon trust for George Henry Arthur Vezin, failing whom to the testator's brothers and sisters, Mrs. Ernst Hasenclever, of Reimscheid, Ehringhausen, Rhein, Prussia; Mrs. Samuel Grant, of Philadelphia; Mr. Henry A. Vezin, of Denver City, Colorado; Mr. Oscar Wm. Vezin, of New York City, U.S.A.; and Mr. Otto Vezin, of Crefeld, Germany.

A codicil to the will states:—"I direct the executrix of my said will, or such other person as shall have the disposal of my remains after death, and my wish is that the same shall be reduced to ashes in the least expensive manner at the Golder's Green Crematorium, near London, and in the afternoon, if, as I am informed is now the case, a lower charge then obtains than in the morning; and that such process of cremation be attended by no formality or ceremony of any sort or kind, and particularly by no religious service of any description, and that none of the ashes to which my remains are so reduced be preserved or kept by anyone in any urn, receptacle, or otherwise howsoever, but that the same be spread as manure on the ground by one of the gardeners at the cemetery at Golder's Green aforesaid.

"And, further, that no tombstone, urn, or other monument of any kind be erected or dedicated to my memory; and I also earnestly desire that no relative or friend of mine should express his regret for my death by the wearing of mourning or by the sending of any wreath or floral emblem or token to place on or with my remains or in any other conventional manner. And I earnestly request and desire my said executrix or such other person as aforesaid, and all my relatives, friends, and acquaintances to respect and observe my wishes as hereinbefore expressed or indicated."

A fashionable function was the wedding at St. James's Roman Catholic Church, Spanish-place, on Wednesday of Mr. Basil Foster, actor and athlete, and Miss Gwendoline Brogden, the popular musical comedy actress. In addition to the parents of both bride and bridegroom there were present at the ceremony the Duke and Duchess of Rutland, the Countess of Londesborough, Lady FitzGeorge and her daughters, Mrs. Lycett Green, Mr. George Grossmith, jun., Mr. Maurice Farkoa, Miss Lily Elsie, Miss Maxine Elliott, Mrs. Coyne, Miss Phillis Le Grand, Miss Marjory Moore, Mr. Lennox Pawle, Mr. Knox, the fast bowler, the Hon. C. N. Bruce, and all the Foster brothers with the exception of "M. K.," who is abroad.

The ceremony was performed by Father Bernard Vaughan, assisted by Canon Gildea. The bride, arrayed in white, was attended by four bridesmaids carrying flower-bedecked wands. Miss Gabrielle Ray, Miss Emmy Wehlen, Miss Kate Welch, and a number of the bride's girl friends from Daly's Theatre were among the wedding guests. The bridegroom had his brother, Mr. G. N. Foster, for best man. Following the service, a reception was held at the Coburg Hotel, and later in the day Mr. and Mrs. Foster left for Venice. On their return to England they will go on tour together from Daly's Theatre with The Merry Widow.

When the theatrical season is in full swing in Paris artists and playwrights are too busy to devote much time to quarrelling, and they, therefore, wait till the end of June to start hostilities. This year the one to open the ball was M. Georges Courteline, a clever and witty playwright; and the decision given by the Court of Cassation is important in so far as it has a direct bearing on authors' rights in respect to cinematographs. The case, which aroused a certain amount of interest, is as follows: Cinematographs in Paris are plentiful, and within the last few years there has already been trouble between them and authors and theatres for the infringement of copyright. M. Courteline, having come to the conclusion that a cinematographic play, called Ta Femme te Trompe, bore a family likeness to his well-known comedy Boubourouche, brought an action against the management of that show for piracy. When the case came on for hearing the Court found for the plaintiff. The defendants having appealed to a higher Court, the latter reversed the judgment and decided in favour of the defendants, ruling that in both plays there was a husband, a wife, and the latter's lover who hides in a cupboard, elements that may be called common property in the theatrical world. This ruling created some excitement in the playwright's world, and M. Courteline then carried the case to the Court of Cassation. The judges there rejected M. Courteline's appeal, holding that there was not sufficient similarity between Boubourouche and Ta Femme te Trompe to justify an action for piracy. M. Courteline, therefore, lost his case; yet dramatic authors here are delighted, for the Court, having delivered judgment, referred to the question of law, and said "that an author's rights in a dramatic production extends to any reproduction of the scenes of the piece on a cinematograph."

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's Speckled Band is being played to good houses at the Adelphi. Mr. Lyn Harding's interesting and thrilling interpretation of Dr. Grimesby Rylott, adds another portrait to that actor's wonderful gallery of criminal studies. So great is the success of the play that foreign managers have been competing with each other to secure the rights for their respective countries.

There has been some discussion as to whether the late Mr. Hermann Vezin played Pierre Lorance in Proof at the Adelphi. The explanation is that during the ten months' run of the piece the wrongfully-convicted hero had four delineators. When the piece was first produced, on April 20, 1878, Daniel Bandmann played the part, which, however, he only sustained for a month. On May 20 he was superseded by Charles Kelly, who held it till August, when Henry Neville played it for six weeks. On Sept. 23 Hermann Vezin took up the rôle, and played it till the end of the run.

We understand that certain statements in the letter from Mr. W. Payne which we printed last week require explanation. Mr. Charles Frome, to whom Mr. Payne refers, has received altogether £202 15s. from the Actors' Benevolent Fund. We are informed that it is many years since Mr. Frome earned £3 10s. a week; that his refusal of the Fund's offer of a £1 a week engagement was offensively expressed; and that he has never contributed anything to the Fund.

Miss Ella Erskine and Mr. Walter Peace will shortly start on a pastoral tour with their own company, which includes Mr. Loring Fernie, Mr. Croker King, and Mr. C. Leveson-Lane. The Fantasticks of Edmond Rostand, As You Like It, Much Ado About Nothing, Twelfth Night, George Peele's masque The Arraignment of Paris, and the Hippolytus are among the plays in their extensive repertory, as well as scenes from Maeterlinck and several one-act plays, some of which have been adapted by Miss Erskine from the French and German. The first performance will take place at Killerton, the beautiful Devonshire residence of Sir Thomas and Lady Acland, after which the company will play in the Kursaal Gardens at Harrogate and at many of the principal watering-places.

Of The Arraignment of Paris Francis Nash, writing in 1589, gave it as his opinion that this masque displayed Peele's "pregnant dexterity of wit and manifold variety of invention, wherein he goeth a step beyond all that write." The masque derives the title of The Arraignment of Paris from the circumstance that towards the close the Trojan shepherd is brought to trial before Jove for having adjudged the apple of discord to Venus. Peele intended the characters of Paris and Œnone to represent the Earl of Leicester and Lady Sheffield. The work was represented before Queen Elizabeth by the children of her chapel before 1582, and anonymously printed in 1584, fifteen years before The Old Wives' Tale. Peele's "pleasant conceited comedie" was "plaid by the Queen's Majestie's Players."

During the coming week Miss Ella Erskine and Mr. Walter Pearce will be seen in a new farce, called Looking for Trouble, at the West Pier, Brighton.

Mr. George Alexander, as President of the Society of West-end Theatre Managers, and representing the Actors' Association, gave some important evidence on Tuesday, before Section A of the Local Registration Committee, which was considering the section of the London County Council General Powers Bill, which deals with employment agencies, including theatrical and music-hall agencies. Mr. Alexander advocated the substitution of licensing for registration. Mr. Alexander, in answer to a question from the chairman, said his position was that there were people carrying on the business of agents whom he had reasonable ground to suspect were not fit and proper persons, but against whom there would be difficulty in proving a case before a magistrate, but who would not face an appeal if the council refused a licence. Mr. Alexander also referred to the injury done to the theatrical profession by "bogus" agents. All agents of standing and respectability would be glad to see anything done which would eliminate the "bogus" agent and the class which, under pretence of theatrical or musical agency, carries on a very different class of business.

Mr. Weedon Grossmith is to be congratulated on the substantial success which has been already secured by Robert Lascelles' sensational farce at the Garrick Theatre, the demand at the box office for every part of the house showing very plainly that Billy's Blunder is just the change from the usual style of farce that is wanted by the public. The pruning knife has been judiciously used, and the piece now plays much closer, the curtain falling each evenig at 11.5. The big scene in Act II. is greeted with rounds of applause, and the great duel between the notorious brigands arouses the greatest enthusiasm, and necessitates this particular act-drop being raised six and eight times at each performance.

Older members of the profession will regret to learn of the death of Mr. George Mulliss, the well-known theatrical boot and shoe maker, late of 292, Strand, and 168, Wardour-street. He passed peacefully away at 25, Chesterton-road, North Kensington, on the 21st ult., at the advanced age of eighty-one.

"Tantalising Tommy," which is still running merrily at the Playhouse, will start its provincial tour at Bristol on August 1, under the direction of Messrs. Lyn Harding and Sidney Cooper, with Mr. George Mallett in charge. An excellent company has been engaged, including Miss Nellie Lonnen, Mr. Hastings Lynn and Mr. Roy Byford. The same management re-open their tour of The Flag Lieutenant in August, and Mr. Edgar Kent will again be seen as Dicky Lascelles. This company recently celebrated their 500th performance at the Theatre Royal, Portsmouth.

The Rehearsal Company will appear at the Court Theatre on Friday evening next, in Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew, with Mr. Clive Currie as Petruchio and Miss Eva Balfour as Katharine. The Bishop's Fortune, a new one-act play by Gaston Gervex, and a garden fantasy, with music by Mme. Liza Lehmann, entitled The Life of a Rose, will also be included in the programme.

"The Bishop's Fortune" deals with a phase of factory life, and also contains a strong clerical interest. The leading parts will be played by Miss May Saker and Messrs. Montague Mazeran and Dennis Cleugh. Mrs. Fowler is the wife of the Rev. Montague Fowler, the rector of All Hallow's Church, London Wall, late chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury. Mrs. Fowler has already achieved success as a dramatist, being the authoress of The Accolade, the striking dramatic episode of the Reign of Terror, which was played at the Court Theatre the other day with Mr. H. A. Saintsbury in the leading part.

Mme. Réjane's first London "causerie" took place at the Ritz Hotel on Tuesday. Mme. Réjane talked about Theodore de Banville and Verlaine. She told her audience that they should know more of these poets, who, in spite of their doubtful reputation as poets for the "jeune fille," had written some of the tenderest poems. She recited two poems. Mr. Hugh Peyton sang, Mlle. Renée Labatut played the harp, and the entertainment ended with a little one-act comedy, La Dame de Niort, in which Mme. Réjane was assisted by Mme. Daynes-Grassot.

Mme. Réjane, at her causerie at the Ritz Hotel on Wednesday, recited works by two French poets, Albert Samain and Soulary. She also appeared with Mr. George Grossmith, jun., in Meilhac and Halévy's Madame Attend Monsieur. Practically a monologue, this clever little piece was one of the favourite selections of Chaumont. Mr. Grossmith described with keen humour the misadventures of the Lancers dance. Mme. Renée Labatut played very agreeably on the harp.

It is stated that Whistler's "Arrangement in Black," otherwise the portrait of Irving as Philip II. of Spain, has been bought by the Metropolitan Museum of New York with some of the interest on the million sterling bequeathed by Mr. J. S. Rogers in 1901. The portrait was not a commission, Whistler parting with it to Mr. Howell for "£10 and a sealskin coat." Later it passed into the hands of Mr. Graves, who sold it to Irving for £100, and it was purchased at the Irving sale of 1905 for 4,800 guineas on behalf of Mr. George C. Thomas, of Philadelphia, who died in 1909.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Osmond (Miss Hettie Zillwood), of Glenville and Osmond, are taking a well-earned rest at Ramsgate, after their successful six weeks' stock season at the Theatre Royal, Belfast, where they became big favourites. They commence their autumn tour of Glenville and Osmond's successful drama, For Wife and Kingdom, at the Palace Theatre, Ramsgate, on July 18, and are well booked up at the best theatres until December when a ten weeks' vacation will be taken to enable them to produce their attractive pantomime, Aladdin. The other company, under the direction of Mathew H. Glenville, concludes at the Hippodrome, Sheerness, on July 2, a successful summer tour of Arrah-na-Pogue, and begins, at the Grand Theatre, Brighton, on Aug. 1, the autumn tour of that evergreen favourite, The Still Alarm, which is nearing its seventh year under this go-ahead management.

We regret to announce the death, at the age of 78 years, of Mr. Wm. Chart, who some thirty years ago was proprietor of the refreshment bars at the old Theatre Royal, Brighton. At that time his brother, the late Henry Nye Chart, was proprietor and lessee, and his other brother, Tom Chart, was treasurer. Deceased, who passed away at Burgess Hill, Sussex, on June 21, leaves a widow. The funeral took place on Saturday, near Dorking, Surrey.

Mr. Alex. Maclean has decided to extend the tour of his new romantic play, My Lady Bellamy, owing to the enthusiastic reception it is meeting with. A production in London is in contemplation.

The first production in Australia of Mr. Arthur Shirley's new drama, The Mother of His Child, took place at His Majesty's Theatre, Perth, on June 4. The piece was produced by Mr. George Marlow's company.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman A. Overton (Anna Beaumont), after a most successful tour with Temptation, have been re-engaged for the autumn by Miss Nora Carton.

The vivid impersonations of the stage, especially in feminine rôles, owe a good deal to the appropriateness of the dresses with which they are fitted. Especially is this the case in regard to the character of Enid Stonor, so admirably played by Miss Christine Silva in The Speckled Band at the Adelphi. The gowns made for this part, and supplied by Mrs. Caleb Porter, are entirely in harmony with the intensity of purpose of the play. The note of suspense and dread, which accompanies the heroine closely through each act, is subtly indicated in the dress—from the "mourning" gown of the first act, a wonderfully clever treatment of black on the stage, to the various tones of heliotrope blue used in the dresses which lead up to the grey and mauve negligée of the last act, and convey symbolically the colour scheme of the fateful "hyacinth," which must have been the artistic idea. The gowns are carried out, moreover, with an undulation of line that has a serpentine effect, in perfect keeping with the climax: the appearance of the snake itself.

The stage work recently done by Mrs. Caleb Porter, who has built up an enviable reputation as a costumière, includes, in addition to those described above, the character dresses for Tantalising Tommy at the Playhouse, Empire dresses for Miss Dorothea Desmond and Miss Lydia Bilbrooke in The House of Temperley (the purple colouring of one gown made for this lady has induced many of the "red-haired beauties" on the stage to patronise Mrs. Porter's atelier); Miss Christine Silver's gowns for Keble Howard's play, The Cheerful Knave; Miss Rose Begarnie's and Miss Compton's gowns for The M.P. at the Coronet, and Miss Begarnie's dresses for the next production, Society; Miss Brandon Thomas's Doctor's dress for Portia at the recent production of The Merchant of Venice at the Court (from a design by Mr. Herbert Norris); and Miss Viva Birkett's gowns for Miss Dolf Wyllard, Miss Elliot Page's play to be produced at the Apollo shortly. The firm is also dressing several plays going on tour. People who require accuracy of detail and have little time available will be saved much trouble and expense by going to Mrs. Caleb Porter.

The two young actresses, Miss Beatrice Brooke and Miss Queenie Myles, who have been remanded on a charge of stealing a diamond and ruby pendant belonging to Miss Therese Masse, a milliner, of Palace-street, Westminster, where the prisoners lodged for a fortnight, were again before Mr. Francis at the Westminster Police-court on Wednesday. The principal witness for the prosecution was a young servant girl, Florence Lee, who said she found the more valuable portion of the missing pendant in a trunk in the prisoners' room. When cross-examined by Mr. T. D. Dutton, who defended, the girl admitted that money and jewellery had been missed at several houses in which she had been in service recently, and that she had been accused of theft. She also admitted that she had presented a young man with whom she kept company with a gold watch, paying £3 5s. for it. Her wages at this time were 5s. a week. Since the present charge was preferred her mistress had lost a gold brooch. Mr. Francis said the case against the prisoners rested almost entirely on the evidence of the girl Lee. She had no doubt concocted the story, and he was sorry the young women had been charged. He then discharged them.

Miss Beatrice Forbes-Robertson, daughter of Mr. Ian Robertson and niece of Mr. Forbes-Robertson, was married in New York on Thursday to Mr. Swinburne Hall, a lawyer. The popular actress and Suffragette, having arrived from England in the Teutonic, hurried to the City Hall with her fiancé in a motor-car and obtained a marriage licence. Half an hour later the couple were married in the presence of a dozen friends at the Church of the Ascension.

Miss Forbes-Robertson made her first professional appearance at the Criterion in the autumn of 1900 as Winifred in Mamma. She afterwards toured with Mr. Forbes-Robertson, playing Ophelia, Desdemona, and other rôles in his répertoire, and later appeared at the Duke of York's, the St. James's, His Majesty's, and several of the London theatres. Subsequently she went to America, where she played Judith Mainwaring in The Morals of Marcus and Miss Roberts in The Mollusc.

Lady de Bathe has bought from the Wesleyan Methodists a chapel near her residence at Kentford, and has fitted it up as a village games club and reading-room. At the opening entertainment on Monday she recited "The Seven Ages of Man," and supplied several monologues and items.

Miss Clare Absolom, the lady who gained the first place (Amateur Class) at the British Empire Shakespeare Society's Elocution Competition, is a pupil at the Ben Greet Academy, and has been entirely trained by Mr. Fewlass Llewellyn. This student also took the best "Under Age" prize, being under nineteen years of age.

The Alexandra Theatre, Stoke Newington, has been enjoying such decided success that it will remain open during the summer months. The theatre's stock company, including Mark Lester, Henry J. Corner, J. J. Daly, Misses Frances Ruttledge, Nellie Dade, and May Hallatt, will play next week The Clockmaker's Hat, the remainder of the programme being devoted to dramatic sketches and other interesting pictures on the hioscope.

Mr. Fred Kerr has returned from America, where he has been fulfilling a long and successful engagement in Mrs. Dot, but will go back to New York in October and join Miss Maxine Elliott for the revival of Mr. Frank Stayton's comedy The Inferior Sex.

Mr. Frohman has commissioned Miss Gladys Unger to do the English version of Le Bois Sacré, by MM. De Caillavet and De Flers, from whom Mr. Frohman has secured the rights in their next three plays. The rights of two pieces by M. Henry Bernstein and three by M. Henry Bataille have also been secured by Mr. Frohman, who will soon start for New York to commence rehearsals of eleven different productions. He will return at Christmas to undertake a second set of productions.

Mr. Frohman has kindly yielded to Mr. Charles Hawtrey the comedy called Inconstant George, adapted from L'Ane de Buridan, which was played by Mr. John Drew in America last season.

Miss Evelyn Millard will reappear, on Wednesday, Aug. 31, at the New Theatre, in an English version of Pierre Berton's four-act play La Rencontre, originally performed at the Comédie Française in June, 1909. Everyone will welcome Miss Millard's return to the stage, and her reading of the rôle of the heroine, Camille de Lancay, is certain to be deeply sympathetic.

Miss Sophie Harriss, who has just returned from a Continental holiday, and whose headquarters are now at the Midland Hotel, Manchester, will take out a musical comedy in the late autumn.

The following Scholarships in connection with the Royal Academy of Music will be offered for competition at Michaelmas, 1910: The Goring Thomas, for composition; the Henry Smart, for organ playing or composition, open to ladies only; the Sainton-Dolby, for singing, for ladies; the Liszt, for composition or pianoforte; the Ross, for wood-wind instruments; the Dove, for violin; six Ada Lewis scholarships respectively for contraltos, tenors, basses, violinists, viola or violoncellists, and harpists; and the Stainer Exhibition for the organ. Detailed particulars and forms of entry can be obtained from the secretary on application.

Miss Iris Hawkins, the charming little actress so well-known to playgoers, was successful in gaining the prize in the ladies' punting race at the fancy-dress rinking carnival at Maidenhead on Wednesday last. Miss Hawkins is evidently as thoroughly at home on the rink as she is on the stage. On Thursday night the clever little lady organised a concert in the Town Hall in behalf of the funds of the local cottage hospital.

"Society" will be the fourth of the Robertson revivals on Tuesday next at the Coronet. Three important members join Mr. Robert Arthur's company for this production—Mr. Edward Sass, Mr. W. G. Fay, and Mr. Arthur Wontner, just free from engagements with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree; while other prominent parts will be taken by Miss Rosie Begarnie, Miss Adeline Bourne, Mr. O. B. Clarence, and Mr. Lionel Rignold. It is of interest to add that Mr. Frank Hill, who is to play Moses Aaron, was in the original production of this play at Liverpool in 1865.

At an audience which the Kaiser gave in his sick room to Chief Burgomaster Kirschner and the city architect, Herr Hoffmann, the Kaiser agreed to sell the Berlin Opera House to the municipality. The price is not yet fixed, but is supposed to be about 400,000. Thus passes out of Hohenzollern hands a building which has been in their possession since the days of Frederick the Great. The house is not to be pulled down, but altered. Under municipal management it is to serve no longer as a theatre or opera house, but as a concert hall and place of civic entertainment. The ugly emergency staircases outside, hurriedly run up after the Iroquois Theatre disaster in Chicago, will be removed, and the existing narrow stairs broadened. The structural alterations have begun.

Mr. J. Forbes Knowles has just concluded a successful stock season at His Majesty's Theatre, Aberdeen. The plays submitted were Her Marriage Vow, Woman and Wine, Home Sweet Home, The Lightning's Flash, and Man's Enemy, all of which Mr. Knowles produced, besides playing the juvenile leading parts. Before leaving Aberdeen, Mr. Knowles arranged to make and paint in the theatre's scenic studio the scenery for his autumn production of Nick Carter (Detective), which will be the most ambitious production Mr. Knowles has yet attempted.

Miss Mary Allestree will play Annie in Shame, by Mrs. Chapin, to be performed at that lady's matinée on Friday, July 8, at the Rehearsal Theatre.

Mr. Frank Elliott, who has just finished a very successful leading engagement with Mr. Percy Hutchison, playing John Crewys in Peter's Mother, has been specially engaged to sustain the part of Sir John in the forthcoming revival of The White Man at the Lyceum Theatre.

On Monday afternoon an enjoyable "at-home" was given by Mr. W. Higgin, at her beautiful residence, Malone House, Belfast, in honour of the visit of the Rev. Donald Hole, M.A., of London, the capable and energetic organising secretary of the Actors' Church Union. The Rev. Mr. Hole gave a short address, explaining the work and objects of the Actors' Church Union.

Mr. Charles Hartley and Miss Ethel Gordon Paull left Victoria yesterday by the boat train for Flushing, en route for Carlsbad, where they will give their entertainment to-morrow (Sunday) evening.

Mrs. Alfred B. Cross terminated on the 24th ult. a special engagement as the Duchess of York in Mr. Martin Harvey's production of Richard III. at the Lyceum Theatre.

Since Mr. J. Chas. Imeson has taken over the Grand Opera House, Middlesbrough, things have been brisk at that magnificent house, and little wonder considering that such companies and stars as the following are included in the bookings:—Mr. Lewis Waller and company, The Arcadians (Mr. Walter Passmore), The Dollar Princess, The House of Temperley, Dear Little Denmark, The Merry Widow, The Fires of Fate, Our Miss Gibbs, the D'Oyly Carte répertoire, The House Opposite, The Whip, the Carl Rosa Grand Opera Co., Mr. John Tiller's record pantomime, and several others.

Pupils' performances will be given at the Ben Greet Academy, 3, Bedford-street, Strand, on Tuesday, when the programme will consist of the Casket scenes from The Merchant of Venice, the Hubert and Arthur scene from King John, Mr. Cosmo Gordon-Lennox's comedietta The Impertinece of the Creature, and the Lyric drama King Rene's Daughter. The stage will be under the direction of Mr. Fewlass Llewellyn.

Mr. Brandon Thomas, who again played the Showman outside the "National Memorial Theatre," at the Actors' Orphanage Fête on Tuesday, was assisted in the platform entertainment and the periodical processions round the grounds by Miss Grace Vanna as Columbine, Mr. Roy Byford as the Brigand Chief, Mr. Frank Arlton as Little Willy, Mr. Hugh Wakefield as Policeman, and Mr. Cecil Barth as the musical director, Herr Paddy Whiskey.

Miss Clara Morris, the famous American actress of the last generation, has been seriously ill, and is now totally blind. She is threatened with expulsion from her home at Yonkers, the holder of a mortgage upon the property having foreclosed, and the premises now being advertised for sale by auction.

The 500th performance of Our Miss Gibbs will take place at the Gaiety Theatre this evening.

"Without straying into the arena of political polemics," says the Musical News, "one may suggest that certain policies in the Kaiser's Government are superior to ours. To note one only here, pending the passing of an Imperial theatre law by the Reichstag, it is proposed that at every theatre there should be an advisory committee to deal with the question of the stage-struck amateur, and to contend with an evil which is common to both nations. The cases in this country and Germany are parallel. Amateur actors and vocalists with more money than ability are crowding out a deserving body of professionals. The influx of such dilettanti to the stage is an obvious advantage to the managers, who are naturally more human than humane. Let us take an example of ordinary occurrence. A musical comedy is about to be produced. Young Mr. A., an ex-public schoolboy, having persuaded his wealthy parents that he is no good for anything else but the stage, applies for the second leading part.

"Having a fair voice, a good appearance, a knowledge of stage dancing, and plenty of assurance, the part, which is not a difficult one, could be undertaken tolerably well by him. His parents, ready to give him a send-off, are prepared to pay the manager a premium of £300, repayable by a three-pound-a-week salary, the duration of the run being mere speculation. If the piece lasts over two years, their get their money back. Probably it won't, but at least their boy's name appears 'under the clock' nightly for a few months, and he is on the way to permanent engagement.

"A first-class professional also applies for the part. He wants the not unreasonable salary of £6 a week, not much when the length of the engagement is in doubt, and when the endless tips to dresser, call-boy, stage-door attendant, and others are considered. Whom do you suppose the 'cute manager will take? So long as he has three eminent artists to head the bill, the two leading juveniles and the comedian, his cast is satisfactory. In Germany this sort of thing is going to be stopped. The advisory committees—to which, by the way, those connected with any dramatic academy will be inadmissible—will interview the stage-struck amateurs, advise them as to their talents (advice which will in most cases be a polite rejection), and see that the genuine professionals are not underpaid or rested. There is plenty of scope for such committees in this country."

"At present the disadvantages under which English singers have to work, as compared with their Continental brethren, are very great," writes "A Music Lover" in the Mail. "The English artist has not infrequently to learn a part in an opera that he or she has never seen or has had any opportunity of seeing, whereas the foreign artist can easily see it in the nearest town and is probably quite familiar with it. Then, too, there are no permanent opera houses in this country where singers can get any regular training, and too often their rôles are given to them without allowing enough time for necessary preparation and rehearsal. These facts are not mentioned to cast blame on any operatic management, but rather to point out, as already mentioned, the immense handicap of the English singer in the operatic field."

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

An Anecdote of Hermann Vezin.

Mr. J. Pitt Hardacre writes:—"I have just been reading the last will and testament of poor Hermann Vezin. It is sad reading. My memory took me back to many pleasant hours in his company, and to one in particular. Dear Henry Neville had invited a lot of us to a launch party to start from Reading, and to return in the evening to the George Hotel, which he had some little time before acquired. We were theatricals, artists, authors, journalists, and private friends. After the dinner, which I need not tell anyone who knows anything of Neville as a host was of the very best, and the champagne flowing freely, the evening was given up to short speeches, songs, and recitations. In a slight lull, and there were not many, I got on my feet and said, 'Mr. Chairman, may I beg upon you to call upon a gentleman whom, with all your perspicacity, you might be likely to pass over. He is one with a serious mien, a poet's head, and is, in fact, a tragedian. But, Mr. Chairman, perhaps you are not aware that behind that appearance of seriousness there lurks a sense of humour little dreamt of. The gentleman I allude to is known as one of the best raconteurs of the day, and I would like you to call upon him to give us a few of his best drawing-room stories. I allude, sir, to Mr. Hermann Vezin.' I got a 'Roland' for my 'Oliver.'

"Vezin rose and began: 'Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, once upon a time it fell to my lot to play Iago to a certain gentleman who happened to be the proprietor of the theatre I was performing in. Wild horses shall not drag his name from me—which it was Pitt Hardacre. After the performance the worthy Othello had a crowd of friends in his dressing-room, and they were full of compliments. "Oh, guv'nor, you were splendid! Why, Vezin wasn't in it. You knocked him into a cocked hat. You were magnificent," &c., &c. But he, with his knowledge of the world, simply turned round and quietly said, "Irish or Scotch?"'"

Sir Herbert on Henry VIII.

"Shakespeare's Henry VIII.," says Sir Herbert Tree, in a Daily Mail interview, "is essentially a pageant play, and from its nature requires elaborate production. As we shall present the play at His Majesty's the performance, exclusive of entr'actes, will occupy two and a half hours. It will be given in three acts, one of which will contain the coronation of Anne Boleyn at Westminster Abbey. This is hallowed by tradition, for it is recorded that in 1725 a performance was given in which the coronation was introduced, the mounting of that scene alone costing the enormous sum—for those days—of £1,000.

Shakespeare and Pageantry.

"I believe that in Shakespeare's time pageantry played a very large part in the production of Henry VIII. In the original folio the order of the procession passing through the streets is given in detail; also a description of the christening of Queen Elizabeth is contained in the author's directions. It is a very curious fact that a play written and performed during the reign of that Queen should have brought her into it, and that another monarch not long dead should have figured as its chief character. The equivalent of that would be impossible to-day. In those days the stage had a wider scope; it was the abstract and brief chronicle of the time."

The Provincial Drama.

The recent criticisms of the drama by Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, the well-known playwright, have aroused a great deal of controversy, and the somewhat daring statement in his most recent speech, which declared that the drama was virtually dead in the provinces, has been warmly challenged. To a representative of the National Press Agency, who called upon him at his London residence, Mr. Jones said: "I retract nothing. As a rule the country theatres are deserted except at pantomime times, or when a London star comes down, or when some notable success in musical comedy is played. The immense popularity of the music-halls is perhaps the chief cause. The music-halls are better organised, and their entertainment is brighter, livelier, and more amusing than the entertainment of the theatre. The performance is more cheerful, and the various entertainers are better versed in the art of holding and amusing the public. In a music-hall a single performer, or a troupe of performers, have to keep the audience amused every moment; if they are unable to do this they instantly fall out of the bill. But in the theatre an actor, who is only one member of the company, may let a scene down, and he is not instantly dismissed, so the impression is given that the play is a dull one.

He Blames the Managers.

'But I must say the chief part of the blame attaches to the managers of the provincial theatres. I am told by managers of theatrical touring companies that there is little disposition amongst touring country managers to meet the opposition of the music-halls by giving a better entertainment at the theatre; on the contrary, as the music-halls have gradually bettered their entertainment, the theatre managers, instead of trying to meet it with a better entertainment at the theatre, have cut down their expenses in every way, and often refused to give the touring manager sufficient terms to enable him to bring out a good company. It is obvious that if the theatres are to compete with the music-halls, they must do so by continually bettering their productions. I believe that the drama, if properly represented, will always possess the greatest attraction for the people; but before the drama can again be a means of entertainment in the country it will have to be organised in some different manner and presented to the masses under more favourable conditions.

A Practical Suggestion—

"In each of our leading towns a local company should be started, something on the lines of the company that Miss Horniman has organised in Manchester. I see the Manchester Guardian has called me to account for not mentioning the good work that Miss Horniman has been doing in Manchester. I intended to mention this in my speech at Oxford, but in the hurry of debate I passed it over. I am, therefore, very glad to acknowledge that the Manchester Guardian is quite right in drawing my attention to it; and I should like to make amends by saying very plainly that I think that in the multiplication all over the country of some such scheme as Miss Horniman has organised in Manchester, lies a way in which we may hope for a remedy to the present neglect and unpopularity of the theatre. A similar scheme has also been tried at Glasgow, under Mr. Alfred Wareing, and has, I believe, met with encouraging success. In the establishment in all our large towns of local companies prepared to play a round of plays we may, I think, hope for a beginning of better things.

And a Promise.

"Would you offer your own plays to these local companies?"—"Certainly I should—all of those that are available—and I feel persuaded that my brother-authors would also lend the scheme every encouragement. The essential thing is that in each town the scheme should be controlled by a man who loves the drama for its own sake, and who is prepared to give the local population the best plays. I believe that the local populations everywhere will respond."

ACTORS' ORPHANAGE FUND FETE.

Always a very popular function, the Theatrical Garden Party, in aid of the Actors' Orphanage Fund, held at the Botanic Gardens on Tuesday last, attracted, we should think, a record number of visitors. The weather, inclined to be fickle, kept fine throughout the afternoon, and the scene in the main avenue was a very bright and animated one. All the notable people in the profession in town appeared to be present, determined to help this most deserving of charities, either by giving their services in the many directions necessary, or by cheerfully "shelling out" to the pretty and daintily-clad actresses, who, with winning smiles and artless pleadings, disposed of tickets for the numerous side-shows, programmes, teas, &c.

"THE PICK OF OAKHAM."

It was impossible in the time to "do" all the attractions; but it was very early evident that the majority of the visitors were determined to visit the Theatre Royal, the "only National Theatre in existence." A procession round the grounds advertising the play promised "plenty of blood," and doubtless the popularity of Mr. Cyril Maude and the other artists appearing in this "nerve-racking" melodrama, and the remembrance of similar "thrillers" played at previous fêtes, were responsible for the crowds that lined up and packed the tent at every performance. Mountains of millinery somewhat obscured the view of many of those unable to gain front seats; but no one allowed a detail like that to interfere with their enjoyment, and the play was voted a "screamer" by all who witnessed it. The Pick of Oakham; or, the Girl with the Bad Habit, was written by Mr. Leo Trevor and Mr. John Harwood, and the cast was as follows:—

The Earl of Lowater .....Mr. E. M. Robson
Hon. Jack Cholmondeley..Mr. Kenneth Douglas
Major Sutton D'Ethe .....Mr. Cyril Maude
Ned Snaffle .....Mr. John Beauchamp
Tiny Pulham .....Mr. Lennox Pawle
Cocksure .....Mr. Harry Nicholls
Oddson .....Mr. Fred Lewis
Binns .....Mr. Lionel Rignold
The Hon. Gwendoline Mortgage
Miss Hilda Trevelyan
Pansy Pulham .....Miss Clare Greet
Faith Mercy .....Miss Maidie Hope

This "timorous, terrifying tincture of tragedy," Lowater was funnily enacted by Mr. E. M. Robson; Mr. Lennox Pawle as Tiny Pulham, the jockey, was simply immense; that delightful little actress, Miss Hilda Trevelyan, gave a droll enactment of the heroine; and all the other players submitted equally clever portrayals. The "magnificent picture" in front of the booth was painted by Mr. Bruce Smith; Mr. Brandon Thomas was the Showman; and other gentlemen who gave valuable assistance in connection with the Theatre Royal Booth were Messrs. Alfred Turner (manager), John Harwood (stage-manager), C. B. Keston, Marshall, Simms, Pemberton, and Batchelor. The "National Theatre" takings during the afternoon amounted to over £230.

LORD GEORGE GROSSMITH, JUN.'S CIRCUS.

Another prominent attraction was the delicious fooling of the circus company of Lord George Grossmith, jun., the popular Gaiety comedian, appearing as ringmaster, drolly discoursing on the marvellous performance of the Bounding Brothers from Bermondsey, the Marvellous Paynes (Teddy and Freddy), their spoof business creating roars of laughter. Then there were the "Princess Gladys de Hompé," the strongest woman in the world, exhibited by her proud parent Fredemney; Captain Robert Hale, the lion-tamer; George Ali as a dancing pony; and numerous other turns. The orchestra, known as the March Hare Band, heralded in the troupe, among whom were Messrs. Edmund Payne, Ernest Lamberti, W. H. Berry, Fred Emney, Jack McArdle, Davy Burnaby, P. Braham and company, Francis Hector, Harry Pettitt, W. Stephens and Boy, Albert Felino, Fred Payne, Arthur Atherton, Miss Constance Hyem, Miss Gladys Homfrey, Mrs. W. H. Berry, and Mrs. Davy Burnaby.

JARLEY'S LIVING WAXWORKS.

Arranged by Miss Jessie Bateman, with Mr. Arthur Playfair as the showman, inviting the onlookers to "walk up, roll up, or tumble up," and witness the Speckled Band, Roosevelt back in America, and many other wonderful sights, Mrs. Jarley's Waxworks also came in for much attention. Mr. Paul Rubens, the composer of The Balkan Princess, presided at the piano, and Mr. Athol Stewart was the acting-manager. The "waxworks" were enacted by Mr. George Barrett, Roosevelt ("Modesty"); Miss Frances Wetherall, the Woman in the Case; Mr. Arthur Whitby, follow: Gladys Silvani and Harry Grattan, 1; Miss Dundas Slater and Godfrey Turner, 2; Cicely Villiers and Alfred Lester, 3; Miss Morene and Westheimer, 4; and Miss Wyte and George Giddens, 5. A second competition was held, Miss Hodson, Miss Thornton, Miss Doreen Drew, Miss Mannering, and Miss Warner being the ladies who obtained prizes. Male milliners who secured awards were Mr. Turner, Mr. Dan Rolyat, Mr. Maurice Farkoa, Mr. Cyril Keightley, Mr. Philip Leslie, Mr. Lyn Harding, Mr. Alfred Lester, Mr. Charles Amden, Mr. George Giddens, and Mr. Tom Graves. Some £140 resulted from the efforts of the ladies and gentlemen in these competitions.

THE TEMPLE OF FLORA.

Dainty Miss Marie Lohr presided in this rose-entwined rustic temple, and did a roaring trade in flowers, tea, &c. The ice-cream tent was under the direction of Miss Winifred Emery, Miss Evelyn Millard, and Mrs. Mangles, assisted by Misses May Chevalier, Olive Dickens, Elaine Dickens, Muriel Eddis, Gladys Erskine, Molly Evans, Fitzgerald, Winifred Fraser, Eric Groves, Holtz, Hunter, B. Kilby, May Lloyd, Ruth Maitland, Margery Maude, G. Redwood, Elaine Smith, Amy Brandon Thomas, E. Vetter, B. Vetter, and Gwenta Wren.

"WATER RATS" HELP.

In the Palais de Luxe a continuous entertainment was given by the Grand Order of Water Rats, under the direction of Miss May Warley and Mr. W. H. Clemart. Messrs. Harry Tate, Neil Kenyon, Charles Coborn, Bransby Williams, Hal Forde, Dutch Daly, and many other music hall favourites were down to give a turn.

SIGNED PHOTOGRAPHS AND PICTURE POSTCARDS.

THEATRICAL GARDEN PARTY AT THE ROYAL BOTANICAL GARDENS.

in four acts and four scenes, was a delightfully droll burlesque of a sporting melodrama, full of witty lines, outrageous puns, and screamingly funny business. In the first act, the Hunting Breakfast Room at Castle Glanders, the Earl of Lowater, financially embarrassed, of course, owing a few paltry thousands to the villain, Major Sutton D'Ethe, imagines that the latter has come to demand the hand of his daughter, the Hon. Gwendoline Mortgage in settlement of the account. The terrible Major, however, cares not for Gwendoline, who, by the way, is betrothed to the handsome hero, Jack Cholmondeley—proud of the name, every syllable of it. It is Lowater's horse, Tortoise, Sutton D'Ethe covets; and learning from Tiny Pulham, a jockey, that he has a better animal in Limberger, Lowater agrees to part with the Tortoise. In the next scene, a Drury Lane near Bluemarket, Sutton D'Ethe and Oddson, a bookmaker, decide to nobble Limberger, and here also they murder (apparently) Tiny Pulham and Faith Mercy, the villain's victim, "the bad girl of the family"—wink included. This was a most ludicrous episode. Their bodies are "hidden" behind something resembling a tree—a Haw-tree remarks one of the characters, renowned for speaking the "naked truth." Cocksure, the detective, who has been disguised as Chantecler, soon after enters, and accuses the hero, Jack Cholmondeley, of the murder, and there is more absurdly funny business. The villains explain that the horse Limberger is suffering from indigestion, and they are about to administer sour milk; and in the next act they endeavour to give this extraordinary quadruped a poisoned pill. The fiery, untamed steed, of course, enters into the spirit of the thing, and villainy is for a time frustrated by Pansy Pulham, the jockey's mother. In a struggle between Sutton D'Ethe and Cholmondeley, the former declares he will vanquish his enemy with a bite, each of his teeth containing a poisoned pellet. Of course, Limberger is the victor in the race on Upson Downs, the winning post being shifted about to suit his convenience, and the curtain finally descends on a riotously comic scene. Pistol shots, sword thrusts, and terrible shrieks and struggles were numerous in this wildly farcical "tale of the shiers," and the company presenting it appeared to revel in its absurdities, and worked tremendously hard throughout. Mr. Cyril Maude, in a wonderful make-up, was a truly terrible villain; Miss Frances Dillon, Cinderella; Mr. George Shelton, a Scarecrow; Miss Madge Titheradge, a Russian Dancer; Mr. Henry Kitts, Little Lord Fauntleroy; Miss Elaine Inescourt, Mrs. Sarah Siddons; Mr. Nelson Keys, A Baby ("Innocence"); Miss Esmé Hubbord, Hodge the Ploughboy; Mr. J. H. Brewer, Sandow; Miss Lydia Rachel and Miss Amy Fauchette, his pupils; Mr. Sam Walsh, Charles Peace; Miss Winifred Bateman, Joan of Arc; Miss Joan Burton, the Bad Girl of the Family; Mr. Neil Kenyon, Mrs. Jarley; Mr. Harry Danby and Mr. Arthur Burne, her assistants. Messrs. Clarence Blakiston, Robert White, jun., Jack Frost, E. Gordon, and Miss Polly Emery also lent valuable assistance in this department.

ACTRESSES V. ACTORS AT CRICKET.

A diverting and unconventional game this, of course, Mr. Rutland Barrington particularly distinguishing himself as a fun-maker. The gentlemen carried their right arm in a sling, and occasionally no one seemed to know what had become of the ball. At the conclusion of the match Mr. Barrington put up for auction a bat inscribed with the names of all the beautiful actresses who had taken part in the game on its blade. Drolly expatiating on its value, he succeeded in getting 21s. for it. Those announced as taking part in the match, under the captaincy of Miss Vane Featherston and Mr. Hayden Coffin were Messrs. Charles Bishop, Rutland Barrington, Ernest Cameron, Vincent Clive, Basil Foster, Louis Goodrich, A. S. Homewood, Alfred Mansfield, Godfrey Tearle, Sam Sothern, and Lorne Wallett, and Misses Joan Challener, Margaret Fraser, Charlotte Granville, Ethel Hodgkins, Christine Jeansen, Mellie Pearson, Adelaide Rind, May Saker, and Mrs. Webb Ware.

HAIR DRESSING AND HAT TRIMMING COMPETITION.

This was under the direction of Miss Phyllis Broughton; Mrs. George Alexander acting as judge. Extraordinary effects were obtained by the actors in their droll efforts to fashionably dress the tresses of a number of charming actresses; and the hat-trimming competition by well-known actors also resulted in some most grotesque "models." The prizes in the former went to the "victims," and the awards in the first competition were as Lytton, and Emmy Wehlen. Managers: Messrs. A. Lytton and C. Milne Gay.

Miss Cicely Richards had charge of the Grand Refreshment Kiosk, assisted by Misses Dorothy Chard, Lilian Digges, Dorothy Drake, Norah Kerin, Hettie Muret, Lillian Rees, Ethel Harper, and Messrs. Ralph Hall-Caine, W. S. Miln, and Leslie Stiles.

The Anglo-American Shooting Gallery was also well patronised, and provided plenty of fun. Those giving their services here included Miss Gertie Millar, Miss Gabrielle Ray, Mr. Lauri de Frece, Miss Madge Murray, Mr. C. M. Hallard, Mr. Joseph Coyne, Mr. Gerald Du Maurier, Miss Evelyn Beaumont, Mr. Herbert Haines, Miss Pauline Chase, Mr. Robert Loraine, Miss Lily Elsie, Miss Alexandra Carlisle, Mr. Guy Standing, Miss Florence Harwood, Mr. Harry Gerrish, Mr. Clifford Brookes, and Mr. Henry Ainley.

The Lake Tea Châlet had for its managers three popular actresses in Miss Lena Ashwell, Miss Constance Collier, and Miss Eva Moore, many prominent actors and actresses giving assistance; and the Strawberry and Cream Tent, under the direction of Miss Lilian Braithwaite and Miss Ethel Irving, also kept a number of well-known people busy. The band of the Royal Military School of Music, by permission of Colonel A. G. Balfour, played during the afternoon; and the Hampstead Mandoline and Guitar Orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. Albert Roberts, was also in attendance.

Aspiring playwrights will be interested in a case which was decided on Saturday in the Paris courts. Mlle. Jeanne Dortzal, formerly an actress at the Odéon and the Vaudeville, wrote a one-act play in verse, entitled Stenio, and submitted it to the director of the "Cercle des Essayeurs," an institution which aims at discovering young talent and producing the works selected as possessing those qualities which make for success. The play was received in 1908, and its author paid £60 to cover the cost of two performances. The piece was never played, the reason being that M. de Max could not interpret the principal rôle, and Mlle. Jeanne Dortzal sued for the return of her money. The court has ordered both money and manuscript to be returned to the author.

It is not too much to say that the audience at the Haymarket Theatre on Tuesday evening were entirely under the spell of a bewitching and irresistible personality. But apart from the influence of Miss Neilson-Terry on the house, Priscilla Runs Away is a most pleasant, amusing, and entertaining play. A beautiful young Princess runs away from home with her tutor, Herr Fritzing, to avoid a marriage arranged for her without her consent with a certain Prince of Lucerne.

Priscilla and Herr Fritzing get safely to England, and select a village called Symford as their dwelling place. The Princess, of course, knows nothing of real life, and her amiable errors are very amusing. She offers to buy a pretty cottage, which is inhabited by the only invalid in the village, Mrs. Jones, a peevish, petted old woman. Sir Augustus Shuttleworth, the young and timid son of the Lady Bountiful of the place, and Robin Morrison, the rather vulgar offspring of the Vicar and his severe spouse, come to the cottage bearing gifts for Mrs. Jones, and meet Priscilla, who has taken a false name, and has introduced Herr Fritzing as her uncle. Sir Augustus falls in love with her at first sight; and Robin Morrison pesters her with impudent attentions. Mrs. Jones imposes on Priscilla's ignorance as far as to induce her to send for a bottle of rum, on the plea that it is her "medicine." Then the Princess indulges in reckless liberality to the villagers, to whom she gives a treat on the Sabbath.

The reckoning comes ten days later, in the third act. The rum proves to have been the worst thing possible for Mrs. Jones, who becomes hysterical and troublesome; the children are all ill from overeating at the treat; the lady's maid breaks out into open mutiny; and, worst of all, the money which Fritzing brought from Lothen-Kunitz has all been spent, and the local tradesmen come clamouring for their money. Morrison tries to kiss Priscilla, and she boxes his ears; Sir Augustus proposes marriage to her, and is told that it is out of the question; and, humbled and harrassed on all sides, the poor Princess almost breaks down. Fritzing rushes out to chastise Morrison, and is locked up by the police; and, in the midst of all these misfortunes, Prince Henry, who has kept himself informed of Priscilla's movements, appears with money and renewed devotion. Horrified by a chorus of indignation, in which the vicar's wife, the tradesmen, and Mrs. Jones join, Priscilla snatches the money, puts on her hat and cloak and starts for Lothen-Kunitz, the Prince's announcement of his and her rank astounding the Symfordians immensely. There is some amusing comedy in the last act, in which the inevitable result of Priscilla's repentance and acceptance of Prince Henry is attained.

The triumph of Miss Neilson-Terry in the part of the Princess Priscilla was thorough and complete. Her strikingly beautiful appearance in a very becoming costume won admiration at the outset; but this was not the chief factor of her success. Miss Neilson-Terry is a born actress, and seems to have grasped all the principles of her art in the comparatively short time during which she has been on the stage. Her performance was, throughout, brilliantly effective, without the least sign of artifice or mechanism. Her facial play, both when speaking or listening, was eloquent, and her varied expression, the strong yet unexaggerated manner in which she dealt with the outburst of hysterics in the third act, and the delicate tact and judgment she displayed in the whole of her performance satisfied the audience that they were in the presence of a young artist liberally furnished with natural dramatic gifts, and with the means, physical and mental, of developing that gift to the highest degree. Great interest will be felt in Miss Terry's future career and achievements; and her parents must be warmly congratulated on the beauty and ability of their offspring. Mr. E. Lyall Swete, so well remembered by his admirable performance in Old Heidelberg, made a strong, bold, and vigorous Herr Fritzing, his characterisation being capital; and a neat bit of comedy acting, much assisted by an ingenious make-up, was contributed by Mr. Edward Rigby as Dr. Billetson. The stiff formality of the Grand Ducal Chamberlain was admirably suggested by Mr. E. A. Warburton. The part of Prince Henry of Lucerne was played with delicate tact and fine judgment by Mr. Charles Maude, whose appearance and general tone were excellent; and Mr. Charles V. France as the imperative and matter-of-fact Grand Duke made an important and effective appearance. Mr. Louis Goodrich was quite realistic as the aggressive "cad" Robin Morrison; and Mr. Donald Calthrop expressed with poetic feeling the romance and fervour of Sir Augustus Shuttleworth. Mr. J. Fisher White gave a quaint a sharp performance as the plumber; Mr. H. R. Hignett was natural and droll as the despondent carpenter, and Mr. R. W. Hutton was efficient as the clerk, and Mr. Norman Page was decidedly good as Mr. Price, the Footmen being imposingly represented by Mr. J. Dickson-Kenwin and Mr. Arthur Webster. Miss Helen Haye looked and acted well as the Grand Duchess of Gerstein; and Miss Amy Lamborn was very vigorous in the third act as the rebellious maid Annalise. An irresistibly funny rendering of Mrs. Jones was contributed by Miss Sydney Fairbrother. The querulous old woman was depicted most oddly and humorously, and with the effect of evoking some of the loudest laughter of the evening. It was certainly a memorable impersonation. Miss Frances Ivor as Lady Shuttleworth was the most benign and amicable of Lady Bountifuls. Miss Agnes Thomas is unapproachable in parts like that of the stern, unbending Mrs. Morrison, and she embodied the particular type chosen most truthfully; and Miss Victoria Addison was natural and quietly comic as the country girl Emma Jones, Miss Margaret Murray and Miss Enid Rose being very excellent as a nurse and a maid. The play, which was produced for Mr. Herbert Trench by Mr. Norman McKinnel, went extremely well, and achieved undeniable success. The scenery, costumes, and appointments—no unimportant items in a production of this sort—were admirably designed and arranged by F. Cayley Robinson; Mr. Joseph Harker's sets were worthy of that famous scenic provider; and Miss Neilson-Terry's dresses, by Paquin and Debenham and Freebody, were charming. The reception of Priscilla Runs Away was very enthusiastic.

Horace Welbourne .....MR. GRAHAM PHILLIPS
Alf. Higgs .....MR. CHARLES GRAHAM
Mrs. Lovelace .....MISS NORA MCDONNELL
Mary .....MISS MAUD BRITTEN

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

This is an airy, fairy dramatic trifle, smartly written, but of no pretension. Its principal raison d'être is to display Mr. Charles Graham's versatility. And the contrast between his performance of Alf. Higgs, burglar, and his impersonation of Captain Harry Peyton in Elizabeth's Prisoner, both given in one evening, is emphatically artistic. The scheme of Mr. A. H. Young's comedy is slight. Alf. Higgs, burglar, takes advantage of an open window in Mrs. Lovelace's flat to enter with felonious purpose. Mrs. Lovelace has returned late from the theatre. Her supper is laid, so she dismisses her maid and leaves the dining-room to change into a dressing-gown. On her return she is confronted by Higgs, who robs her of all her possessions, gags her, and secures her with cords to a chair. He then departs to plunder the rest of the house. Mr. Horace Welbourne comes on the scene. Rigged in fancy dress as Mephistopheles, he, like Higgs, seeing the open window, suspects something. He is Mrs. Lovelace's undeclared lover. After a pretty love scene he confronts Higgs, who returns swollen with swag. Higgs is frightened because he thinks he is face to face with the incarnation of evil. He is forced to disgorge, and then in consideration of their new-found happiness, the lovers forgive him.

Miss Nora McDonnell, tastefully gowned, played with grace and charm as Mrs. Lovelace; Mr. Graham Phillips was bright and debonnaire as Horace Welbourne, and looked very well in his masquerade costume. The Alf. Higgs of Mr. Charles Graham was a clever study. His make-up was after the manner of Phil May, and his identity was completely concealed. Miss Maud Britten was amusing as Mary. Mr. A. H. Young's clever little play was well staged, and the audience thoroughly appreciated it.

(FROM OUR BERLIN CORRESPONDENT.)

The threatened tax upon theatre tickets in Berlin is gradually assuming tangible shape. The municipality has now handed the matter to a commission, and it will probably be settled before Christmas. Berlin needs money, and the authorities, seeing, or professing to see, the advantages derived from a similar tax in other cities, will scarcely allow themselves to be dissuaded. The proposed tax—from a penny to 1s. 6d. on each ticket—is expected to add something like £200,000 to the municipal coffers, but how many theatres will be ruined is a question that does not seem to appeal to those in power. It is an open secret that no small number of our managers are in financial difficulties, while all our stages, with few exceptions, have a struggle for existence. The increased dearness of everything has unquestionably diminished the number of theatre-goers; the average German of the middle classes now thinks twice before taking his family to the play, which was formerly their chief recreation. In Munich, where the tax has already been levied, the pinch is felt keenly, and serious consequences are inevitable. Berlin possesses two theatres—the Royal Opera and Royal Schauspielhaus—that are very largely subsidised by the privy purse; in other words, by the ratepayers of the entire population. All the other theatres owe their existence to individual enterprise or love of art.

The Berlin municipality quotes three German cities in support of their theory that the tax system works well. These cities are Elberfeld, Frankfurt, and Magdeburg. A moment's reflection will show the futility of such argument. Frankfurt places two magnificent theatres—an opera house and a recently-erected playhouse—at the disposal of a limited company. The city pays all rates and insurance fees in connection with them, as well as the expenses of any alterations the police may demand from time to time, and, in addition to all this, gives towards the general expenses of the theatres an annual sum of 288,500 marks (£14,425). In return, the city levies a tax upon all tickets, which brings in an average of 120,000 marks, or £6,000, in a season. Magdeburg supplies a manager with a large, handsome theatre, accompanied by numerous advantages in the way of heating and light, and grants a considerable subsidy in ready money in addition. The city makes by the ticket tax about £500 a year. Sixpenny tickets are exempt, and an extra halfpenny is charged on tickets costing more than two marks, and a penny surcharge obtains upon tickets costing more than two marks. Elberfeld manages matters in a similar way. Thus municipality and managers are served, or as Dr. Loewenfeld, manager of the Schiller, rightly observes, these cities give rather than take. Berlin, on the contrary, which does nothing to support histrionic art, is exacting sacrifice after sacrifice.

In the name of the Berlin Managers' Association, Dr. Otto Brahm, manager of the Lessing, and Dr. Raphael Loewenfeld, manager of the Schiller, have just forwarded a memorial to the Berlin City Fathers, renewing the objections and misgivings to which the association gave utterance when the tax question was first mooted some years ago. The association considers the tax proposals a grave danger to German art. Dr. Brahm draws attention to the financial situation, and points out innumerable difficulties that will arise should the tax come into force. "Where," he asks, "will the line be drawn?" The tax in all fairness must extend to cabarets and other forms of amusement besides theatres. Now in the cabarets there is frequently no charge for admission, but merely high cloakroom and programme fees. How will taxation be possible here? And what about Press and other free tickets, advantageous terms (as is the custom here) for students and others, and invitations to prominent persons? Is the manager not to be permitted to invite his own guests? And then, again, how is the control to be exercised? Perhaps, as recently in Munich, where the books in the manager's private office were demanded—an affront which caused storms of indignation. All these questions and many more are introduced clearly and concisely in the memorial.

The association, with the memorial in view, has asked the opinions of leading Parisian colleagues. These are printed in the pamphlet, sandwiched between the representations of Dr. Brahm and Dr. Loewenfeld, and form very interesting reading. M. Antoine says, in a lengthy reply: "The taxation of the theatre—already the most overloaded of any enterprise—appears to me perfectly senseless, and it has been repeatedly proved in the case of bankruptcy that the sum paid in taxes to the Commissioners of the Poor would more than have sufficed to pay the bankrupt's debts. If a tax must be levied at all, it should only be upon the net takings. It is abominable to tax the gross profits. I am convinced that all my colleagues will tell you the same, and we Parisians did very wrong to remain quiet, and not to fight by all means in our power against our tax."

M. Porel, of the Vaudeville, writes: "May the German managers continue to combat the ticket tax, for that is the cause of the slow but sure death of their French colleagues! In my long career I have had over 25,000,000 francs income, of which the Poor Commissioners have had 2,300,000 francs. To-day it is I who am the poor man, and I assure you I am neither extravagant nor vicious." The manager of the Gymnase trusts that the day is not far away when this harmful tax will be abolished, for now it is not worth living in a republic that taxes its enterprisers so unequally. MM. Coquelin and Hertz write as follows: "If your city authorities imagine that the Paris managers do not feel the enormities of the ticket tax, they should cast an eye at our business books. They would see that we have nights when our takings amount to 2,000 francs, while our expenses are 2,500 francs; yet, notwithstanding this loss of 500 francs, we are forced to pay a tax of 181 francs. The clearest proof of the injustice of the ticket tax is that in every case of bankruptcy the under-balance has been found to be less than the poor rates enforced." The manager of the Folies Bergères puts his answer to the association in the form of a conundrum. He says: "When a manager has 4,000 francs expenses and only 3,000 francs receipts, consequently a loss of 1,000 francs, he must pay, nevertheless, 275 francs tax. Is this logical?" All the Paris managers combine in wishing their German colleagues success in the justifiable fight.

Not only is the Actors' Association protesting, but the Social-Democratic Party is taking up the cudgels in defence of the innocent amusement and recreation of the people. Meetings were held in six parts of the city one night recently, a resolution couched in sharp terms being passed in all. The tax, it was declared, was an enemy to culture and education of the masses; it was unjust and tyrannical. The resolution demanded the municipality to prove their vaunted Liberalism, and not to follow the example of Junkerdom. In a word, the proposed taxing of the intelligent recreation of the people has become a very general and acute question here.

ROYAL OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

M. Gustave Charpentier's opera Louise was performed at Covent Garden on Saturday night, June 25, and the great impression the opera made when given last year for the first time in England was increased by the fine representation at the Royal Opera on Saturday.

In the cast there were some changes. Signor Marcoux replaced M. Gilibert, whose powerful study of the Father last year aroused such interest in the opera. Signor Marcoux's reading was thoughtful and artistic; while the affection of the old French workman for his daughter and his horror of her leading a Bohemian life in Paris, were finely expressed. To give the intense contempt felt in France by homely, yet dignified workmen for anything approaching a poetical or artistic career, the part really requires a Frenchman; but in purely dramatic situations, such as the pathetic scene where Louise is dismissed from her old home by her father, Signor Marcoux fully rose to the occasion. Mme. Edvina has improved on her delightful Louise of last season, and strikes a deeper and more pathetic note, her acting also shows greater contrast. Mme. Edvina sang "Depuis le jour" beautifully, and she displayed dramatic power in the final scene. M. Dalmorès again impersonated Julien most successfully and made an impassioned lover. The fine duet between Julien and Louise was sung with splendid fervour, and M. Dalmorès acted with refinement and manly grace. As the Mother Mme. Bérat was perfect in the truth and realism of the character; while Mlle. Olga Loewenthal, in the parts of Le Gavroche and L'Apprentie revealed true comedy spirit. Excellent also was the Irma of Mlle. Edna de Lima and the Camille of Mlle. Symiane. The graphic workshop scene, with its lively incidents, was admirably acted, and among other members in the long cast who distinguished themselves may be mentioned Mlle. Bourgeois, Miss Phillips, Miss Edith Clegg, Mr. Edmund Burke, and Mr. D'Oisly. Orchestra, scenery, and stage-management were all excellent. M. Frigara conducted skilfully, and a large audience gave the opera a most enthusiastic welcome.

In the performance of Faust on Wednesday night at Covent Garden, the Russian artist, Mme. Kousnietzoff, impersonated Marguerite. Last season Mme. Kousnietzoff achieved great success in this part, and her beautiful voice and original acting gave special interest to the performance on Wednesday. Mr. Edmund Burke appeared for the first time as Mephistopheles and sang the music admirably. Mr. Riccardo Martin again was Faust, and Mr. Bourbon Valentin, the rest of the cast being the same as on a former occasion. M. Frigara conducted and a large audience was present.

AN ACTOR SUES FOR SALARY.

At the Westminster County Court, before his Honour Judge Woodfall on Monday, Mr. Philip Cuningham, an actor, sued Mr. Ernest Dare, an actor-manager, to recover £10, the balance of salary for a special week's performance at Cambridge of a play entitled Mrs. Darcy and the Don, in which the plaintiff took a leading part.

Mr. Arthur Mulligan, instructed by Mr. H. Percy Becher, solicitor, was counsel for the plaintiff, and defendant appeared in person.

The plaintiff's case, according to counsel's opening statement was that the defendant rang up plaintiff at his club, and plaintiff not being present, defendant left a message. Defendant wrote to plaintiff asking him whether he was at liberty to perform for a special week at Cambridge from May 31 for a leading part in a new comedy, and also stating that the cast included Miss Annie Hughes. Later Mr. Cuningham met the defendant at the Primrose Club, and in reply to Mr. Dare said his terms were £20 a week. Mr. Dare said he thought £10 would be sufficient, and then, said counsel, the usual result came about, and they agreed to split the difference and agreed the week's salary to be £15. The play was rehearsed from time to time, and on Sunday, May 30, the company went down to Cambridge. On the following night the play was produced. There was not a very large audience, but in spite of that the play was produced again on the Tuesday night. About 5.30 on the Wednesday night a notice was posted, signed by Mr. Dare, to the effect that he had booked the Artillery Theatre, Woolwich, for the last three nights of the week, and the company were requested to assemble at Cambridge Station for the train at a certain time. During that evening Mr. Dare went to the plaintiff's dressing-room and handed the plaintiff an envelope containing £5. Mr. Cuningham asked him for £2 10s. to make up the additional proportionate salary up to that time. Mr. Dare told plaintiff he could have "any amount of money next morning, if he wanted it," and that he would be travelling with him in the train to the Artillery Theatre, Woolwich. On the following morning the company arrived at Cambridge Station, and on inquiry they found that Mr. Dare had already left for London, and had left the tickets in charge of the stationmaster. The company did not know whether in the circumstances they should go on to Woolwich or not, but took the train to Liverpool Street. There the Station Superintendent handed to Miss Hughes a piece of paper containing the telephone message, "Woolwich date cancelled." Plaintiff made inquiries and found that the Woolwich Theatre had been booked, but that something went wrong. Mr. Cuningham demanded several times of Mr. Dare the balance of his salary, £10, but had been unable to get it, though defendant had never repudiated the contract. Defendant had in the correspondence suggested that plaintiff should work out the odd three days by giving flying matinées or something of that sort, but had never suggested that he did not owe him £10.

The plaintiff in the course of his evidence in support of counsel's statement, said he was an actor of twenty-five years' experience on the stage, and had played leading parts for the last twelve years.

Defendant said plaintiff was engaged by him for three nights certain, it being optional on his (defendant's) part to extend the engagement for another three nights.

Plaintiff: That is untrue, your Honour.

Defendant, replying to the Judge, said he took the tickets for the company's return to London.

His Honour said whichever way one looked at it the defendant was liable for the balance of the salary, and there must be judgment for the plaintiff with costs.

A DOUBLE tragedy was enacted in Stuttgart on Wednesday, when Dr. Olois Obrist, until recently conductor of the Court orchestra, murdered Fraulein Anna Sutter, a Court singer well known on the concert stage. The doctor had long cherished a passion for Fraulein Sutter, and lately, in agreement with the singer, he had secured a divorce and was to have married her shortly. The wedding day was about to be fixed when the lady, who appears to have formed a friendship with a young opera singer, informed Obrist that she would not marry him.

ON the morning of the tragedy Dr. Obrist called at Fraulein Sutter's flat with a bouquet of flowers, and, brushing past the servant, rushed through the salon into the bedroom, where Fraulein Sutter was asleep in bed. There, without saying a word, he drew a pistol and shot the sleeping woman twice in the breast with fatal effect. The murderer then shot himself twice in the chest, and fell dead on the spot. Fraulein Sutter, who was about thirty-five years of age, was exceedingly popular with the Stuttgart public.

"PRINCIPALS" OR "SUPERS."

In the Marylebone County Court, on Monday, before His Honour Sir William Selfe, Mr. Herbert Edward Terry, an actor and sketch producer, of Melrose-avenue, Cricklewood, sued the Stockport Empire Theatre Corporation, Ltd., for £17 10s., being half the amount agreed to be paid for the production of a sketch from May 9 to May 16 of this year.

Mr. Tyfield said that the action arose out of the production by the plaintiff of a sketch called Wanted, at an agreed expenditure of £35. The sketch was produced, and on the third day Mr. Gilmore, the managing-director of the Stockport Empire, sent for the plaintiff, and complained that he had not six principals in the cast, as stipulated. Mr. Terry denied that this was so; and Mr. Gilmore then demanded that Wanted should give place to another of Mr. Terry's sketches, entitled Retribution. This, Mr. Terry explained, was impossible, as the artists, scenery, &c., were in London, and rehearsals were necessary, and time did not permit. Mr. Gilmore, however, refused to allow Wanted to be played for the remainder of the week, or to pay the plaintiff more than half the sum agreed upon for the week, and the present action was for the balance.

Mr. Herbert Edward Terry, in bearing out counsel's statement, said that the sketch was produced with six principals and two supers, and on the opening night was applauded. On May 11 he was told that Mr. Gilmore, the managing director of the theatre, wished to see him, and, during an interview, Mr. Gilmore asked him how many principals there were in the sketch. Witness replied that there were six, and that two of these were men he had engaged in the town. Mr. Gilmore said that he had no right to engage persons locally, and almost immediately afterwards he again sent for witness, and then demanded that he should at once substitute Retribution, another of witness's sketches, for Wanted. Witness explained that that was impossible, as the Retribution company, scenery, &c., were all in London, and it would be impossible to get them to Stockport in time. Mr. Gilmore then said that, as Retribution could not be substituted, he could only pay witness for the night's production of Wanted, and that the remainder of the engagement would be cancelled. The following day, when witness went to the theatre, he found that another turn was billed in place of his sketch.

Plaintiff, in cross-examination, said that it was the usual custom to engage men locally to play minor parts in sketches. A principal was a person who had a speaking part in the production. It was true that some had not very much to say, but they had to say it properly.

Mr. Smith: Tell us what they said.

Witness replied that such sentences occurred as: "Well, what is the trouble, sergeant?" "Do you think Morgan has got a hand in this spoof?" "What is he like?" and "Good luck to him!" (Laughter.)

Mr. Smith: In the case of two of these men, who were engaged locally, I suggest that they never spoke at all, but that someone behind the scenes spoke for them.

Plaintiff: Certainly not. I was on the stage all the time, and it could not have occurred.

Mr. Smith: What did you pay these supers, or principals, or whatever you call them?—I paid them 4s. for rehearsals and 2s. each performance.

Mr. George Gray, an actor and sketch producer for twenty-five years, called as a witness, said that a principal performer was one who spoke lines.

Mr. Tyfield: Any number of lines?—Yes.

Mr. Smith: If a man came on the stage and said "Hurrah!" would he be considered a principal?—No; I should regard him as a super.

Suppose he said "Hurrah!" two or three times, would he be a principal?—No, but there is the man who says: "My lord, the carriage waits." (Laughter.)

Would he be a principal?—He would have to be a principal, because he would have to be able to speak the lines properly.

If you paid a man 2s. a performance, would you regard him in any case as a principal?—If he could speak his lines intelligently. You would not get that from anyone in the North. You must get those who can speak the King's vernacular.

Witness added that it was not at all unusual to engage men in provincial towns to take up small parts. Generally there were such men about looking for parts, some of them old actors, and others accustomed to speak from a stage.

Mr. Lionel Nathan, stage manager to the plaintiff, corroborated Mr. Terry's evidence, and said that he was on the stage when the sketch was produced, and he was certain that no one spoke the "troopers'" lines for them at the wings.

For the defence, Mr. Black, acting-manager at the Stockport Empire, said that he heard a voice off the stage, and believed that it was someone speaking for the "troopers." Two of the men who played troopers he knew as old supernumeraries. They had been engaged in that capacity at the Empire.

Mr. Smith: Did they ever speak?—One did once. (Laughter.)

And he never spoke again?—No. (Loud laughter.)

Did they speak intelligently?—No.

Mr. William George Gilmore, managing-director of the Stockport Empire, said that they were very dissatisfied at the theatre with the sketch Wanted, and he considered that he was perfectly justified in demanding that it should be substituted by the sketch Retribution, which, with four principals, witness considered a much better production. Retribution only cost £25 a week to put on, whereas Wanted cost £35, but witness said nothing about the reduced cost. He considered that the sketch Wanted was not what it had been represented.

Mrs. Gilmore, wife of the last witness, said that she sat out the sketch Wanted, and saw Mr. Terry, who was at the side of the stage, speaking for the "troopers."

His Honour said that he was of opinion that the plaintiff could not have substituted the sketch Retribution in the time given him, and he was also convinced, as Mr. Terry and another witness denied, that the "troopers" on the stage had had their parts spoken for them at the wings, that Mrs. Gilmore must have been mistaken. He gave judgment for the plaintiff for £17 10s. and costs.

THE authoress of Priscilla Runs Away, the new play at the Haymarket, is a typical Englishwoman, but loves to talk about her home in Pomerania, where she has lived for several years. "It is the solitude of my Pomeranian home that is, in a way, responsible for the new play," she confided to an interviewer. "It lies in the hills away from all town life. Soon I discovered that I was suffering from that old English complaint, common to my sex, of 'Nothing to do.' So I took to writing—jotting down my daily fads and fancies in a journal. I sent it to a publisher, who accepted it, to my absolute astonishment. That was how my first book was written. Then I wrote 'Princess Priscilla's Fortnight,' my characters being created from types, not, as some people have thought, from living individuals. One day a friend of mine suggested I should weave it into a play. I do not know much about theatres, but I found playwriting very fascinating."

A BOMB was exploded in the Colon Theatre, Buenos Ayres, on Sunday, and as a result seven persons were injured, two of them seriously. About one hundred Anarchists have been arrested on suspicion of being implicated in the affair.

CHRONOLOGY OF THE MONTH.

MR. J. D. HUNTER'S BENEFIT.

Mr. J. D. Hunter, general manager of the Hastings Pier Pavilion, secured two crowded houses on Wednesday, the 29th ult., for his farewell benefit. After thirty-five years' active service as artist, entertainment, and general manager his popularity drew to his side a host of artists and friends who volunteered their services.

As was to be expected, the entertainments were under distinguished patronage, including that of his Worship the Mayor, Mr. R. W. Mitchell, M.A., J.P., Mr. Arthur du Cros., M.P., and Mrs. Arthur Du Cros, Mr. Harvey du Cros, J.P., and Mrs. Harvey du Cros, chairman and directors of the Hastings Pier Co., Mr. W. E. Brown, Mr. Lewis T. Weston, chairman and directors of the Gaiety Theatre Co., Mr. W. Rowlands, Mr. Charles Scutt, chairman and directors of the Rinkeries (1909), Ltd., Mr. Leopold (manager of the American Palace Pier), Mr. Wallis Arthur (of the Beach Concert Pavilion), Mr. W. Slade (manager of the Public Hall Co. and director of the Royal Concert Hall Co.). Amongst the many attractions on the occasion, the Royal English Opera company, under the direction of Mr. T. H. Friend, produced Don Giovanni and the Cottage Scene from Flotow's opera Martha, under the conductorship of Mr. T. Lawton; Mr. Hunter and his combination of artists, including Messrs. Cowell and Hawker and the Misses Bayley and Vera Dudley, performed in a laughable farce The Secret, they also appearing in the Trial Scene from Pickwick.

Mr. J. D. Hunter also gave the first song he sang on the Hastings Pier, "My old wife and I." Numerous other artists—Mr. George Blackmore, Miss Vera Dudley, Miss Winifred Dixon, Mr. J. Baker Guy, Mr. Val Marriott, &c.—volunteered their services, and the entertainments were a great success. At the conclusion, in a very effective speech, Mr. Hunter thanked the amusement committees and the music halls for their generous assistance.

THE Crown Skating Rink, Neath, is to be converted into a theatre early in August, after being entirely redecorated and furnished. Mr. Leon Vint, of the Palace, is the proprietor, and his manager, Mr. Arthur Noice, will combine similar duties at the theatre.

ON Tuesday, June 28, at the Liverpool County Court, before Judge Thomas, Harry E. Jones, of Wallasey, and part manager of the Winter Gardens, New Brighton, brought an action on a judgment summons against Ludwig Blattner, manager of New Brighton Pier Pavilion for Messrs. Adeler, Sutton, and Allendale, to recover £41 17s. 8d., costs in an unsuccessful slander action brought by Blattner in the Liverpool Court of Passage, and in which judgment was given for the defendant Jones without the case for the defence being heard. Ludwig Blattner, in cross-examination by Mr. Morris, barrister, instructed by John O'Hara, solicitor, said that he was manager for Adeler, Sutton, and Allendale, who controlled about 30 places of entertainment, but for this he received no salary, but was to have 10 per cent. of the profits at the close of the season. He admitted that he drew cheques for his expenses. Asked about the line on the various bills, "Blattner's Pier Orchestra," he said he got nothing out of this. After hearing counsel, His Honour gave judgment for £2 per month, and in default gave permission to apply for a commitment order.

OWING to the indisposition of Miss Violet Vaughan, Miss Grace Denbeigh-Russell has created the part of Margaret Dane in Mr. Van Biene's sketch, Karl's Luck, which was recently produced at Kelly's Theatre, Liverpool, after The Broken Melody. Miss Denbeigh-Russell returns to Are You a Mason? to take up her old part of Eva Perry at the Grand Theatre, Douglas, on July 4.

"WE are in reaction from the school of Bouccicault and Gerald Griffin," says Mr. W. B. Yeats, in an interview in the Manchester Guardian. "These men write of Ireland with the thought of England in their minds. They always thought of Ireland as a prisoner in the dock before a packed jury, and themselves as the prisoner's advocate. These new dramatists are thinking only of Ireland. For the first time in comedy we find the harsh satire which has been characteristic of the Irish from the time of Swift to the time of Tim Healy. It is not that we are peculiar in this, for Spain and France—you may say the Continent generally—is harsh in its satire. England is amiable. Probably to the very end the satire of Ireland will be that of Goya rather than that of Punch. When one of our Cork naturalists sees a thing he believes to be evil he describes it in the strongest images he knows, because he is excited about it. He is only thinking of Ireland and its needs. England heard Bouccicault and Griffin, but she only overhears our young men. Synge never interrupted his reverie to think whether the rich man beyond the sea might misunderstand it. He wrote as if he were talking to himself on some Western hillside. . . . The harsh sincerity of our young men comes of their passion for reality."

MR. JACK STRAW, one of the joint hon. secretaries for the Music Hall Sports, sends us the following from the Hippodrome, Coventry:—"As the result of the labours of our worthy chief bandit and chairman, Mr. Albert Le Fre, Mr. Coborn, and myself, I am greatly delighted to be able to give you the following 'fat' result of our joint robberies up to the present. THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT
FOR ACTOR AND COMPOSER.
By ALBERT A. STRONG, LL.B. (Lond.).

Chapter I.
Chapter II.
PERFORMING RIGHT.
Chapter III.
CHAPTER IV.
MUSICAL COPYRIGHT.
Chapter V.
INTERNATIONAL AND COLONIAL COPYRIGHT.

Copyright confusion is like the poor, always with us, and as it seems likely to remain so until at least the crack of doom, it were well for all concerned, or likely to be concerned, to take immediate steps to secure a copy of Mr. Albert A. Strong's new work, entitled "The Law of Copyright." Mr. Strong is already favourably known to the profession for his textbook on "Dramatic and Musical Law," which, like his latest production, is published at "The Era" office. "The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer" essays to make clear to the non-legal mind what is—or, in some cases what probably is—the law as to musical and dramatic copyright. The chapters on the Berne Convention and on the Chase Act, passed by the United States Congress last March, are full of interest.—Referee.
"The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer," by Albert A. Strong, LL.B., solicitor, author of "Dramatic and Musical Law" ("The Era" office), seems to be the one compendious and indispensable authority on the subject, as vexed as the "Bermoothes" and as tortuous as a Chancery suit, that has long been wanted. It is in every essential a text book for the perplexed layman, and no solicitor or barrister worth his salt ought to think of taking or appearing in "proceedings" without consulting its pages. It must suffice, after what has been said, to state little more than that the contents include five chapters, respectively named "Copyright as Opposed to Performing Right," "Performing Right," "Infringement and Remedies," "Musical Copyright," and "International and Colonial Copyright." The work, for all its precise authority, is not dry reading. The statutes, with the elucidatory notes, necessarily impose a task on the reader which takes some tackling, but they had to be there. The cases adduced, however, are full of interest. Certain of them might fitly find a place in the romance of copyright. There was the fight of Charles Reade with George Conquest over "It's Never Too Late to Mend," for instance, and the equally interesting conflict of Mr. J. A. Cave with Chatterton over "The Wandering Jew." The latter was a famous battle. Chatterton took it to the House of Lords, and was finally beaten, to the unspeakable relief of Mr. Cave, who is never weary of relating the story. Had the result been otherwise, it would have meant his ruin. I well remember meeting him on the day of his victory and "crashing a cup with him" in honour of the same. "The Law of Copyright" is dedicated to Mr. A. W. Pinero.—Sportsman.
Mr. A. A. Strong has published a book on "The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer," which should be in the hands of everyone who is obliged to know about this perplexing subject. Dramatic copyright in England is in a particularly unsatisfactory state, and it is much to be hoped that ere long some more rational method of securing protection for a play may be devised than the slovenly and sometimes costly "production for copyright purposes" which is at present required. — St. James's Gazette.

REPERTORY THEATRES.

Mr. CHARLES FROHMAN'S courageous experiment at the Duke of York's Theatre has been extremely interesting to watch, and has shown both the delight and the difficulty of carrying out the repertory idea. The delight is on the side of the fastidious, intellectual, and cultured minority of the British public; the difficulty is on the part of the devoted manager. A permanent Repertory Theatre in London would be a treasure and a delight. The general principle involved is that of the representation of minorities. There are many pieces which are "caviare to the general," but are intensely attractive to the epicure in dramatic sensation. VICTOR HUGO thought that the mass of patrons of the drama was composed of the mob, who loved action and incident, the women, who admired sentiment, and the thinkers, who desired intellectual exercise. It is chiefly to the thinkers that a Repertory Theatre appeals, or should appeal, to persons of literary taste, to the poetical, the thoughtful, and the delicately humorous.

Unfortunately, in England, talent which is capable of appealing to these classes is rarely combined with the dramatic instinct. The late ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON, Mr. HENRY JAMES, TENNYSON, BROWNING, SWINBURNE, and Mr. THOMAS HARDY are all unsatisfactory as playwrights. For it is necessary in writing a play to conceive it in the terms of the material employed. It is rare that a painter is successful as a sculptor, because the vehicle of expression in each case is entirely different. In France, however, the drama is treated as literature, and dramatists write for a reading public. Plays are bought as novels are in England, and any delicate merits they may possess are appreciated and understood. The Repertory Theatre is an attempt to cater for the small cultivated class which has the same tastes as the large cultivated class in Paris.

We hope that Mr. FROHMAN will persevere with his experiment next year in the same spirit as that in which he has conducted his Repertory Theatre at the Duke of York's in this. For a Repertory Theatre cannot be judged by a single season. It must be maintained for some time in order that a school of acting and playwriting may have time to grow. The supply of actors and actresses capable of interpreting the most subtle and original work is agreeably liberal. The great difficulty is obtaining a sufficient number of plays.

A Repertory Theatre is a tremendous devourer of brain-work. In order that a constant supply of plays may be provided quite a large number of authors must be inventing, writing, and submitting plays of the peculiar class and quality required. Now even the most intellectual dramatist likes to receive a rich reward for his labours; and the system of short runs is against any very large monetary emolument. This is the real justification of a National Theatre. Mr. FROHMAN'S Repertory Theatre has not had time to establish itself, or to become famous and permanent. In the case of an ideal National Theatre it would be an honour to have a play produced there, and the fame and glory would attract authors more ambitious of honour than of gold. Our leading dramatists must often conceive ideas for plays which they reject as being too fine in texture or too deep in meaning for the ordinary public. The large sums they receive from their ordinary labours place them above commercial considerations; but they require, if not long runs and the resultant profits, that the stamp of intellectual approbation shall be placed on their work by its production at a theatre exclusively devoted to the higher grade of dramatic art.

This question of plays is one of the greatest obstacles in the way of carrying on an intellectual theatre. We use the adjective to convey as best we can our meaning; though, as Mr. BREMNER WILLS pointed out in his interesting letter to us last week, the description should rather run "vital and in relation to life." But intellect is needed to appreciate and enjoy a drama which deals with social questions seriously. Only a small percentage of the population has any care for, or any understanding of, such questions. As a race we are not given to self-examination. We "muddle through" our mentality, as we "muddle through" our wars and our social politics. The play which is a sermon or a lecture in disguise only appeals to a small minority. An audience is a crowd, an assembly of human beings who, when they are part of the crowd each of whom has lost consciousness of certain of his individual mental characteristics. As M. LE BLON says in his thoughtful essay on this subject:

"The mental qualities in which men differ from one another are the acquired qualities of intellect and character; but the qualities in which they are at one are the innate basic passions of the race. A crowd, therefore, is less intellectual and more emotional than the individuals that compose it. It is less reasonable, less judicious, less disinterested, more credulous, more primitive, more partisan; and hence, a man, by the mere fact that he forms a part of an organised crowd, descends several rungs on the ladder of civilisation. Even the most cultured and intellectual of men, when he forms an atom of a crowd, loses consciousness of his acquired mental qualities and harks back to his primal nakedness of mind. The dramatist, therefore, because he writes for a crowd, writes for an uncivilised and uncultivated mind, a mind richly human, vehement in approbation, violent in disapproval, easily credulous, eagerly enthusiastic, boyishly heroic, and carelessly thinking."

The feature of the intellectual theatre in England may be greatly attributed to the gloomy, not to say pessimistic, spirit in which most of the plays are written. The public does not mind being castigated if the castigation be accompanied by amusement. When Mr. GRANVILLE BARKER and Mr. J. F. VEDRENNE concluded their celebrated season at the Court Theatre in 1904 they had paid their expenses and each had a considerable sum in hand at the end of the season. But this was only while Mr. BERNARD SHAW, who is a humorist, supplied them with plays. When Mr. SHAW'S wallet had been, for the time, emptied, and other authors equally anxious to expose abuses, but not equally gifted with amusing qualities, competed for public favour, the results were unsatisfactory. In the case of the French stage, the higher class theatres are eclectic. Their literary pieces are often as comical as they are intellectual. The difficulty of making both ends meet with a pessimist, or at any rate a wistfully melancholy, repertory is shown by the case of the Irish National Theatre. They had the free use of the Abbey Theatre, Dublin, and a subsidy; yet they are asking for what amounts to £800 a year to keep their enterprise "vigorous, intellectual, and courageous for another half a dozen years." There were apparently no heavy expenses in mounting or dressing the plays; the salary list could not have been high; and yet the receipts and expenses could not be made to balance.

Mr. CHARLES FROHMAN'S season at the Duke of York's Theatre has given intense and peculiar pleasure to hundreds of playgoers, and it would be a great pity if he had abandoned his enterprise. A certain amount of mystery hangs round the finance of the season, and, of course, we have no right to expect that the veil which conceals a theatrical manager's private business should be lifted. Still, surmise may be permitted. For instance, the first performances of Misalliance and The Madras House were received with demonstrative approval. We can only imagine, from the prompt withdrawal of these works, that they were not successful. In the case of a Repertory Theatre there must be a certain amount of sacrifice by all concerned. The great thing is to make up our minds what we are aiming at—an advanced theatre with small profits but great distinction, or an ordinary theatre with ordinary plays and the prospect of commercial success.

ACTORS' ASSOCIATION.

Minutes of the Council Meeting held on Tuesday, June 28, at 32, Regent-street. Present: Mr. J. Poole Kirkwood in the Chair; Messrs. Chris Walker, C. F. Collings, Murri Moncrieff, Cyril Cattley, Henry Le Grand; Misses Beatrice Chester, Mildred Cottell, Vita Spencer, and Mr. D. Young, Secretary.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

Two delegates were elected for the proposed arbitration between a member and a manager. The Secretary was instructed to submit the names to the secretary of the Touring Managers' Association, and inform them, on receipt, of the date on which the Court of Arbitration is to be held.

With reference to Mr. Cecil Raleigh's appointment as delegate to the Parliamentary Committee of the County Council, the Secretary was instructed to endeavour to see Mr. George Alexander and to ascertain if he would be willing to give evidence in place of Mr. Raleigh, who, on the information of the County Council representative, was detained in Paris, and therefore unable to attend the meeting of the Parliamentary Committee.

The House Committee's Report was presented by Mr. Murri Moncrieff and adopted.

The Finance Committee's Report was presented by Miss Beatrice Chester and adopted.

The Secretary reported two engagements.

Elections: Milly Lester Stephens, Robert Symes Entwistle. Nomination: Jane Comfort, proposed by Frederick Annerley, seconded by Phyllis Relph.

Mr. Le Grand suggested the formation of a golf club in connection with the Association, so that golfing members visiting provincial and suburban theatres might be able to show their credentials to local clubs as members of a club attached to the Actors' Association. He promised to give a further report at the next meeting.

"THE ADVENTURES OF NOBBLER AND JERRY" have been extended into a comedy in five acts, and under that title it was produced for copyright purposes at the Theatre Royal, Stratford on June 29. The authors are Harry Boden, David Worton, and Lew Lake.

"THIS, THAT, AND THE OTHER," a comedy, in three acts by F. C. Broadbridge, was produced for copyright purposes at the Shakespeare Theatre, Clapham Junction, on June 24. Mr. George Thorne was principal comedian. The piece will go on tour in the autumn under the management of Mr. Charles Cecil.

"MISS ELIZABETH'S PRISONER."

Captain Harry Peyton ....MR. LEWIS WALLER
Major John Colden .....MR. FRANK WOOLFE
Sergeant Carrington .....MR. CRONIN WILSON
Mr. Valentine .....MR. HERBERT JARMAN
John Edwards.....MR. CATON WOODVILLE
Black Sam .....MR. GEORGE WELSH
Cuff .....MR. CHARLES KEENE
Mistress Sarah Williams ..MISS LOTTIE VENNE
Molly Edwards .....MISS GORDON LEE
Miss Elizabeth Phillips..MISS MADGE TITHERADGE

When Miss Elizabeth's Prisoner was first produced, we remarked in our critique that the play was frankly theatrical, with a first act full of stir and movement, and one very cleverly-devised situation; a rather weak second act; and a third act that brought on the inevitable happy ending without any undue strain upon the probabilities. The series of exciting and romantic incidents which result in the union of Miss Elizabeth Phillips and Captain Harry Peyton need not be re-described by us in detail; suffice it to say that the chivalry of Peyton, the impulsiveness of Miss Phillips, and the cruelty and cowardice of Major John Colden created as much pleasure in the audience at the Lyric Theatre on Thursday as they did when Mr. Robert Neilson Stephens and Mr. E. Lyall Swete's play was first performed at the Imperial Theatre on April 16, 1904. On that occasion Mr. Lewis Waller was the Captain Harry Peyton, Mr. Norman McKinnel the Major John Colden, Mr. Owen Roughwood the Sergeant Carrington, Mr. E. Lyall Swete the Mr. Valentine,, Miss Lottie Venne the Mistress Sarah Williams, Miss Constance Walton the Molly Edwards, and Miss Grace Lane the heroine. We need only remind the reader that the pivot of the plot is the affection which young Captain Hugh Peyton pretends to feel for the young lady, Miss Elizabeth Phillips, who has taken him prisoner, in order to induce her to assist him to escape. Afterwards he becomes really in love with his fair captor; but she hears from a tattling friend in whom Peyton confided his first stage of feeling that he has only been tricking her; and she is correspondingly indignant. However, in the end, the young people come to an understanding, and the piece ends happily.

Mr. Lewis Waller is as romantic and expressive an exponent of the part of Captain Harry Peyton as he was six years ago, and his spirited and striking impersonation will create intense admiration and enthusiasm in the ardent admirers who will certainly crowd the Lyric box-office in order to buy seats to witness Mr. Waller in such a congenial character. Mr. Frank Woolfe gives a most graphic and effective reading of the rôle of the repulsive and contemptible Major John Colden; and Mr. Cronin Wilson, in the part of Sergeant Carrington, supplies a reading of the rôle which could hardly be excelled. The character of the octogenarian widower, Valentine, is played with a mixture of humour and irony by Mr. Herbert Jarman, and played exceedingly well; and Mr. Caton Woodville's John Edwards is a performance of remarkable merit, and deserves warm praise. Mr. George Welsh is entirely satisfactory as Black Sam, and Mr. Charles Keene merits commendation for his clever embodiment of Cuff. It was fortunate that Miss Lottie Venne was available to repeat her diverting performance as Mistress Sarah Williams, full, as it is, of humour, finesse, and bright and cheerful comedy. Miss Gordon Lee gave a delightful reading of the telling little part of Molly; and Miss Madge Titheradge as the heroine was warmly expressive, full of grace and feeling, and admirably earnest, alert, and vivacious. Miss Elizabeth's Prisoner was preceded by a one-act piece by W. Cronin Wilson, played for the first time, and entitled

"THE GREAT GAME."

Jim Marsh .....MR. ALEC F. THOMPSON
Bill Hamlin .....MR. W. CRONIN WILSON
Snippy .....MR. STANLEY LOGAN

This lever de rideau, which was described on the programme as a "trifle," was a thrilling bit of low life, well invented, crisply written, and giving good opportunities to all the actors engaged in it. Bill Hamlin, a burglar, is wanted by the police for a brutal murder at Kensington, and is hiding in a basement in a house at Tilbury from the pursuit of a detective named Jim Marsh, who is on his track. Bill's pal, Snippy, a thief, in order to reassure him, shows him a concealed door and secret passage by which at need he can escape into the adjoining house. Then there arrives on the scene a little, silly, talkative Scotchman, who says he has come to see his aunt, the woman who keeps the house. By his never-failing prattle and apparent innocence, he throws the criminals off their guard, and when they discover that his bag contains a chicken and other tempting food, they seize on the eatables and prepare to enjoy a meal. But the burglar has left his revolver on the mantelpiece, and the simple Scotchman, who is Jim Marsh in disguise, possesses himself of it, covers the two rascals, and forces Snippy to handcuff Hamlin, who, covered by the weapon, savagely precedes Marsh in his departure from the place. The success of the acting in the "trifle" was Mr. Alec. F. Thompson's remarkably clever portrayal of the detective, and his neat assumption of the Scotch accent; but Mr. W. Cronin Wilson made a magnificently broad and bullying burglar; and the frisky sneak Snippy had a lively and characteristic representative in Mr. Stanley Logan. The Great Game had the favourable reception which its terse effectiveness deserved.

A Barge Theatre.

A CURIOUS example of the travelling theatre, says the Daily News, travels from place to place through France and Germany by means of the rivers and canals. The theatre is called "International Marine Theatre," and is constructed in the body of a barge 132ft. by 27ft. wide. The stage is nearly 18ft. wide, and there is room for 500 people. The second barge is fitted up with twelve cabins for the members of the company, besides a dining-room, writing-room, and kitchen. In the third barge are the stage properties, including the costumes, scenery, a carriage, six horses, and a donkey.

As soon as the players arrive at a village, they dress up in some of their most picturesque costumes, harness the horses to their gaily decorated carriage, and parade through the streets to announce their arrival. They have an extensive repertory, and sometimes stay for several days in one place.

THE company consists of eighteen persons, several of whom belong to the old family of Perney. The Perneys early in the seventeenth century were strolling players, wandering about the country with a wooden stage made up of loose boards. One of their number hit upon the idea of a barge playhouse, and in the course of years amassed quite a little fortune. His children, however, again took to the road, and for several generations went in waggons from village to village with their show, half circus, half theatre. Now the old idea has been resuscitated, and it seems as if the descendants of the original Perneys would follow their forbear's example and make a very comfortable living with their International Marine Theatre.

WHEN moving from place to place the players dress and live like fisherfolk. They are constantly adding new plays to their repertory, and spend much time learning their parts. The womenfolk make their own costumes, and the men have remarkable facility in scene painting.

The following represented the Shadows from the Plays: King Richard III., Mr. Geoffrey Howard; Hamlet, Mr. Howard Rose; Romeo, Mr. Maclintock Clive; Benedict, Mr. Hugh D. Robinson; Orlando, Mr. Alan N. Birch; Petruchio, the Hon. Guy Charteris; Othello, Mr. Malcolm Bullock; Macbeth, Mr. H. Talbot Rice; Lear, Mr. Tom Heslewood; Prospero, Mr. J. Patric Curwen; Falstaff, Mr. Frederick Anerley; Oberon, Miss Mary Lyttelton; Ariel, Miss Daisy Benson; Puck, Miss Elizabeth Asquith; Ophelia, Miss Joan Balfour; Juliet, Miss Felicia Stewart; Beatrice, Miss Martha Vigo; Rosalind, Miss Muriel Martin Harvey; Katharine, Mrs. Godfrey Baring; Desdemona, Miss Rosamund Grosvenor; Lady Macbeth, Miss Marjorie Villiers; Portia, the Hon. Victoria Sackville-West; Titania, Miss Barbara Jekyll.

By kind permission of the Earl of Londesborough, The Masque of Shakespeare, or at least a portion of it, was performed on Thursday afternoon in the grounds of St. Dunstan's, Regent's Park, the proceeds being in aid of the Shakespeare Memorial National Theatre Fund. At four o'clock, the hour fixed for the start of the performance, a shower of rain was falling, but the downpour soon ceasing a beginning was made. However, the weather was most unfavourable for an outdoor entertainment, the sun being obscured by black, threatening clouds, and a rather strong wind blowing across the "sylvan glade" where the masque was performed. The plot had reached the stage at which Falstaff makes his appearance, when a heavy shower caused the players and the audience to take shelter under the trees. The rain continuing for some time, and the grass becoming thoroughly saturated it was reluctantly decided to abandon the performance for that day. Lady Macbeth under an umbrella and a Romeo in the rain was scarcely in accord with the spirit of Poetry, though such a sight certainly bordered on Comedy; while a dismal, damp Hamlet scampering over the grass in search of shelter was calculated to raise a laugh even among the Immortals. Alas! the fickle English climate was responsible for the flight of masquers and their disappointed audience, and general were the expressions of regret that the concluding portion of the performance could not be given.

The Masque, by the Hon. Mrs. Alfred Lyttelton, was produced under the direction of Mr. Philip Carr, and the music, which had been specially written for it by Mr. Morton Stephenson, was performed by the members of the New Symphony Orchestra. The minuet, which was danced, had been arranged by Mr. D'Egville, the Dance of Poetry, Imagination and Fancy by Miss Margaret Morris, and the other dances by Mr. Philip Carr. To quote from the somewhat quaint phraseology of the argument The Masque "is devised to set forth the true honouring of our rare and precious poet William Shakespeare." The scene is a sylvan glade, the abode of the Goddess of Fame. To her comes a messenger from the earth—the Poet, who, having found no fitting monument to Shakespeare in the land, appeals to the goddess for help. She thereupon calls on Tragedy and Comedy, and bids them summon up the creatures of Shakespeare's genius. These characters or shadows, having no speech save that which has been set down for them in the plays to which they belong, can give utterance to no new thought, and are thus not able to impart counsel. The Poet begs for leave to speak with the spirits of great mortals. The shadows will have none summoned but players who in times gone by have given them shape and spoken their words. A few are called, but alas! the shadows and the players do not agree. The messenger asks for Titania and Oberon, spirits of another sort. They come, attended by Puck and the fairies, but they, too, can give no counsel. They dance instead, and so do some of the shadows. The Poet thinks he had better return to the world of men, as there is no help to be obtained here. There is a sudden and noisy interruption from Prince Hal's boon companion, Falstaff, and then Drama, having gathered the wreaths which the sister arts have earned, speaks of the reverence that should be paid to Shakespeare, and of the temple which must be erected in his honour. Shakespeare himself is then seen crossing the green sward. Of grave demeanour and silent of tongue, he passes slowly out of sight, followed by the Shadows, the Spirits of Mortals, and the Immortals.

Lady Beerbohm Tree as Fame acted with her usual grace of manner, and spoke her lines admirably; Miss Lillah M'Carthy also scored a success as Tragedy; and Miss Lilian Braithwaite was an excellent selection for the rôle of Comedy. The Hon. Venetia Stanley, in the part of History, deserves praise. Mr. Vernon Steel did exceedingly well as the Messenger, and Mr. Herbert Mansfield as Charles Betterton, Mr. George Owen as David Garrick, and Mr. Eric W. Hall as Edmund Kean gave capital representations. The Hon. Irene Lawley was a handsome Peg Woffington, the Lady Eileen Wellesley proved to be a charming Kitty Clive, and Mrs. Walter Rubens is to be congratulated on her Sara Siddons.

The Figures in Prospero's Masque, including Miss Ellen Terry as Drama were all ably impersonated, but, like the Shadows from the Plays, had very little to say or to do. The Hamlet of Mr. Howard Rose, the Romeo of Mr. Maclintock Clive, the Othello of Mr. Malcolm Bullock, the Macbeth of Mr. H. Talbot Rice, the Lear of Mr. Tom Heslewood, and the Falstaff of Mr. Frederick Anerley were all satisfactory, while the ladies who appeared as shadows, gave an equally good account of themselves. But all the players were badly handicapped by the wet, cheerless weather.

THE Earl of Yarmouth, who has produced at Cardiff an up-to-date musical comedy of his own writing and composing, in which he himself takes a leading part, has had a good deal of previous stage experience, and some years ago, it will be remembered, he created a sensation not only by singing and acting in public, but also by appearing in the rôle of a skirt-dancer at the Theatre Royal, Hobart. Lord Yarmouth, it was declared, twirled his skirts with skill and dexterity worthy of Loie Fuller herself, but some censorious folk affected to consider the performance an undignified one all the same. As Eric Hope he appeared under Charles Frohman in New York, in Wheels Within Wheels.

A MAYOR'S ATTACK.

The preliminary business of the Hammersmith Borough Council meeting on Wednesday evening having been dealt with, Alderman Mulholland asked the permission of the Mayor (Alderman S. Bewsher) to broach a question of which he had given private notice.

The Mayor: You may as well get it over.

Alderman Mulholland said the matter indirectly concerned himself, but more directly concerned the Mayor. He had received several letters in reference to it on that and the previous day. Alderman Mulholland then read the following excerpt from the Mayor's speech reflecting upon theatres and music halls as reported in the West London Observer:—"There was a large class of people who were not altogether satisfied with the entertainments given in theatres and music halls. He regarded himself as belonging more or less to 'the old brigade,' who felt simply bored if he had to listen to a long play which might be interlarded with indecencies. He referred to plays put on the stage at the present moment, so-called comic opera, or problem plays, where the problem was the story of an idiotic blind husband. Some of them who were not satisfied with that sort of thing could come into such places as that picture palace not only to be entertained, but to improve their minds." Strong representations had been made to him (the Alderman) both by theatre managers and others. He felt the Mayor's words must have been erroneously reported, as he could not imagine him indulging in such broad, sweeping, and general condemnation. But he and his friends would be glad to know as to whether his Worship had been correctly reported.

The Mayor replied that he had only just seen the report. He had not had time to look at the paper that week; but they must understand that this was a cut-down and abbreviated report of his lengthy speech. He did not know that it was his business to defend what he had said on that occasion, but he was prepared to stand by it. What he intended and meant to say was this: that he had reached an age when some of the comic operas, and he mentioned the name of one, which was the last comic opera he had seen (which he repeated), and he mentioned that it was full of indecencies, and he stuck to that now. He went on to say that some modern problem plays, which were spun out into three acts, might easily be concentrated into a twenty minutes' farce. He stuck to that, too. He had no sympathy whatever with the ordinary problem plays which were put on the stage. Beyond that he did not denounce the theatres, with which he was sure the gentlemen who were present on that occasion would agree with him.

Alderman Mulholland expressed surprise that the broad statement had not been withdrawn. Having made his protest he would let the matter drop so far as that Council was concerned. But he was sure the Mayor's explanation would not satisfy his (the Alderman's) friends, and he was bound to say they did not satisfy him.

The incident then closed.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—It is a matter of keen regret to me to have to refer to any public utterance of the Mayor in terms other than of agreement; but if I were to pass over, without protest in your columns, his remarks at the opening of a picture palace, as reported in your last week's issue, I feel that it would be taken in some quarters as a tacit admission of their truth. The matter was reported in your paper as follows:—"In speaking of the development of theatres and music halls, the Mayor said there was a large class of people who were not altogether satisfied with the entertainments given in theatres and music halls. He regarded himself as belonging more or less to 'the old brigade,' who felt simply bored if he had to listen to a long play which might be interlarded with indecencies. He referred to plays put on the stage at the present moment, so-called comic opera, or problem plays, where the problem was the story of an idiotic blind husband. Some of them who were not satisfied with that sort of thing could come into such places as that picture palace, not only to be entertained, but to improve their minds."

It will be observed that his remarks were not confined to a particular play or theatre, but that on the contrary he made a general and sweeping condemnation, not only direct, but by inference, of all theatres and music halls. When I asked a question on the subject at last night's meeting of the Council—a question of which I had given the Mayor private notice—his reply did little, if anything, to qualify or modify the damaging nature of his statements as published. In the circumstances, I desire to say that his attack is both unmerited and unjust; and most of all is it unfair, inasmuch as it is a generality, which always renders the individual more or less helpless.

I speak more especially on behalf of the theatres; but although I have not an equally intimate knowledge of the music halls, I have no doubt whatever that the Mayor's strictures are equally undeserved. Such views expressed by a private person would be practically negligible; but when they emanate from the chief magistrate of this important borough they possess a power within that borough to prejudice and to damage which is hardly to be estimated, and their influence is calculated to extend far beyond its boundaries. I should like to add that, knowing Alderman Bewsher as I do, and having enjoyed his friendship for some years, I do not believe even now that he meant his words to convey the meaning they do convey; but there it is in cold print.—Yours truly,

J. B. MULHOLLAND.

King's Theatre, Hammersmith, June 23, 1910.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—I am sorry to see by the Mayor's speech at the opening of above, reported in your issue of the 17th inst., that he (the Mayor) has such a poor opinion of theatres and music halls, and thinks electric theatres educational and entertaining and a distinct advantage to the borough. There are in Hammersmith borough two theatres and two music halls, paying a large sum in rates. These places of entertainment are conducted on the best public lines, and the majority of plays performed are quite as entertaining, instructive and educational as pictures at an electric theatre. I have no prejudice against cinematograph theatres, as I am myself a shareholder and director of a large company, and I am pleased to see the Mayor of Hammersmith take such an interest in them; but to throw mud at the theatres and music halls, and to refer to being bored by plays which might be interlarded with indecencies, is, to say the least of it, a very unkind and uncalled-for remark.—Yours faithfully,

WENTWORTH CROKE.

Lyric Opera House, Hammersmith, W.

BOURNEMOUTH begins the celebration of its centenary, for which it has made most elaborate preparations, next week. Numerous fêtes will take place, but a feature of the proceedings will be the aviation meeting. Among the artists engaged in connection with the celebrations are Mme. Melba, Mme. Clara Butt, Miss Edna Thornton, Miss Margaret Cooper, Messrs. Backhaus, de Pachmann, Mischa Elman, Kennerly Rumford, Robert Maitland, and Landon Ronald. At the concert of works by English composers Sir Hubert Parry, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir Charles Stanford, Sir Edward Elgar, and Mr. Edward German will conduct in turn.

VARIETY GOSSIP.

The French Ministry of Public Instruction has paid special honour to the English variety profession by conferring the order of Les Palmes Académique on Little Tich, who is now appearing at the Oxford. He thus becomes an "officier d'Académie."

The order was instituted by Napoleon in 1808, and is conferred on literary men, scientists, and all who advance education. The decoration consists of an oval crown formed by two branches—one a palm and the other a laurel, in gold—and is suspended from a violet ribbon attached to the left breast.

English artists are too prone, perhaps, to call the art of entertaining the public a "business." Frenchmen who have a standard of art in the House of Molière know better, and the many thousands who have laughed at Mr. Harry Relf will rejoice at the honour that has been conferred upon a public favourite—at once so cosmopolitan and versatile.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Rickards, as briefly announced in our last issue, arrived in London on Friday, the 24th ult., after a pleasant voyage, on the Orient liner, the Orvieto. Since his arrival Mr. Rickards has been so overwhelmed with correspondence that he finds it utterly impossible, even with the assistance of his private secretary, Mr. Clifton Clarke, to reply to all. He therefore hopes that artists and agents will take his silence as a polite negative.

Mr. Rickards, who looks bronzed and well, will be in this country until Oct. 21, and hopes to be able to greet his old friends in London and the provinces during his stay. His newest relative is his baby grandson, the child of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Harwood. Mr. and Mrs. Rickards are enjoying themselves at Westwood, his estate near Margate. Letters may be addressed to him, care of The Era.

The prospectus has been issued of the Victoria Palace, Ltd., the company which has been formed for the purpose of acquiring the Royal Standard, together with considerable additional property, and erecting thereon a large and luxurious modern theatre of varieties. The capital of the company is £80,000, in shares of 10s. each.

Mr. Alfred Butt contradicts the report that he is interested in the new Middlesex. He was approached on the matter and invited to become managing-director; but after consideration, he decided not to associate himself with the scheme. He will run one performance a night at the new Victoria Palace.

Miss Louie Freear leaves England in three weeks' time under engagement to the Hymans for the Empire, Johannesburg. After fulfilling engagements in South Africa she hopes to go to Australia. In Britain overseas our quaint little comedienne should sound a note of comedy not readily forgotten.

To know the late Mr. Charles Wilson, whose brilliant career as an inventor and producer of ballets and spectacles was cut short in July last year, was to know one whose heart was attuned to the joy of life, and the writer, who cherishes the recollection of many a conversation with him, found in "Charlie" a man of gentle courtesy, of wide sympathy, and one who reached to a high ideal in art. The qualities that endeared him, more particularly in his home life, to his intimates exercised a genial influence over those associated with him in the various administrative departments of the Moss and Stoll amalgamation at Cranbourn-mansions, among whom his early decease was sincerely mourned.

Upon the "silent shore of memory are graven thoughts of the departed," we are told by the poet Wordsworth, but the love of those he has left behind has suggested a more permanent memorial to Charles Wilson, and in a week or two a few friends will be invited to see the cenotaph that marks the spot where he sleeps his last sleep in Highgate Cemetery.

The memorial consists of a granite cross with anchor and chain. The curb, also of granite, has four posts. All is polished except the anchor and chain. A marble vase and case will stand in the centre of the curb. The date for the touching ceremony of the presentation of the memorial to those nearest and dearest to the departed has been fixed for Aug. 4, when a few words will be said by the Vicar of the parish.

Miss Annie Hughes, whose appearance and success on the variety stage has been voted a success as Napoleon's Washerwoman, will have to relinquish all bookings with herself as Sans-Gêne until November, when she will be seen again in London as the good, beautiful laundress. Miss Hughes starts a provincial tour with Miss Tommy, a comedy drama by Jerome K. Jerome, in July, this tour extending until the end of October. Miss Hughes has made Mr. Jerome's heroine Miss Tommy famous in the provinces, and hopes to repeat the good impression the play created three years ago.

Miss Kitty Marion writes from the Hippodrome, Hastings:—"Will you allow me, for the sake of justice and fairness, to contradict the statements regarding the disturbance in connection with the representation by the Bros. Luck of H.M.S. Perhaps. Their show does not require any such advertisement, and there is nothing in it for Suffragettes to take offence at. I have seen and thoroughly enjoyed it when on the same bill with it some time ago, when it was an enormous success without Suffragette (?) disturbances in front."

Not only frequenters of the London Pavilion, but the music-hall world in general, have heard with regret of the death of Mr. Hugh Francis Lethbridge Astley, who has been chairman of the company from the first, from the time, some twenty-three years ago, when the old "Pav." passed from the late Mr. Edwin Villiers and entered in 1887 on its successful career as the "London Pavilion, Limited." He was also connected with Ronacher's, Vienna, and the Newcastle Pavilion, Ltd.

Mr. Astley, whose familiarity with the halls from their earliest days rendered him a veritable storehouse of music-hall lore, had reached his seventy-eighth year, and was buried at Brookwood on Tuesday last. Formerly a clerk in the Foreign Office, he was a county magistrate for Wiltshire, serving also in the Yeomanry of that county.

On behalf of the committee of the Music Hall Ladies' Guild, 61, New Oxford-street, W.C., Miss Melinda May (secretary) begs most gratefully to thank the following: Miss Fannie Harris (Dent and Harris), giving and collecting 16s.; Miss Camelia Norris, lady's coat and hat; Mrs. Charles Coborn, lady's hat; Miss Lottie Albert, gentleman's dressing-gown and collars; Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Cowper, useful parcel of clothing. Will Mrs. Arthur Hatton, who was present at a meeting of above on Aug. 11 last year kindly communicate at once to above. The handsome portière curtain belongs to her ticket, number 50. Will anyone make an offer for fifteen large sized band books, given by Messrs. Dennis and Morris, per Sisters Macarte.

The Leicester Palace Theatre is now in the hands of the decorators and furnishers, the work proceeding without stopping the performances. The hall, which is one of the largest and handsomest in the provinces, will present a charming appearance when finished.

Mr. Pan. E. Draco, who has been the popular acting-manager of the Palace Theatre, Reading, since its opening, took a farewell benefit at the Cross-street hall in that town on Monday. His friends rallied round him well, and a capital variety programme was presented.

Messrs. Milton Bode and Edward Compton, proprietors of the Opera House, Northampton, have determined to embark upon a new enterprise in that town. A freehold site, centrally situated, has been secured, upon which is to be erected an up-to-date variety theatre, which will be booked and worked in conjunction with a combination of London and provincial halls.

Plans passed by the Northampton Highways Committee provide for another music-hall with an imposing elevation in Abingdon-street, with a convenient approach at the rear in Mellow's-row. Mr. W. T. Simmonds, of Reading, is the purchaser, acting on behalf of a powerful London syndicate, who have allotted £20,000 for the venture.

Mr. P. D. Elbourne, late resident-manager of the Birmingham Hippodrome, has been appointed by Mr. Oswald Stoll, the managing-director of the Leicester Palace Theatre, to a similar post at that hall. Mr. Elbourne, who comes to Leicester with excellent credentials, entered upon his new duties this week. Mr. W. S. Buccleuch, the assistant-manager, is also back again after his visit to the United States, where he went on business and pleasure combined.

The new Scottish Zoo is to be reopened by Mr. E. H. Bostock at Glasgow on Monday next, and all the attractive features that made the success of this popular resort in the past are to be revived in up-to-date style. Signor Volpi's Italian Circus will provide a large part of the entertainment for the opening weeks.

The Regent Theatre of Varieties, Salford, closes to-night for alteration and decoration, and will reopen on August Bank Holiday.

The Palace Theatre, Darlington (Ltd.), having been let on lease to the East Coast Variety Halls (Ltd.), all contracts are cancelled as and from Aug. 27 next, in accordance with the Arbitrator's Award.

The Matlock Bath Urban District Council are desirous of letting their newly-erected Pavilion and Pump Room, with the grounds adjoining. Mr. Fred W. Gill, Clerk to the Council, Hunter's Chambers, Matlock, will give all particulars.

"Lydia and the Parson," a spoilt tragedy in one act, by Archibald H. Pocock, will be produced, under the personal stage direction of Mr. Martin Moore, at the Alhambra, Brighton, on Monday next. The sketch is a distinct departure, combining as it does bright natural comedy with intensely dramatic situations.

Dr. Walford Bodie has been playing this week at the Empire, Dudley, to record business, both houses being packed to the doors nightly with the élite of the town. Recent events seem only to have increased the doctor's popularity, and his soul-stirring electrical experiments are cheered to the echo nightly. His local challenges to electrical and scientific experts are creating quite a sensation. He is now fully booked till November, and has had to refuse many offers of immediate dates.

The second annual report and accounts of the Barnsley Empire Palace, Ltd., to be submitted to the shareholders at the annual general meeting on Tuesday next, shows the profit available for distribution to be £2,338 13s. 1d., which it is proposed to apply as follows:—To pay 8 per cent. on ordinary share capital (of which an interim dividend of 4 per cent. has already been paid), £1,200; to place to general reserve fund, £1,000; to carry forward, £138 13s. 1d. The retiring director, Mr. W. G. England, offers himself for re-election, as does also the auditor, Mr. James Gibson. Mr. Will Smithson is the managing-director of this prosperous concern.

A correspondent writes: "In a recent issue of the Glasgow Evening Times I noticed a prospectus in connection with the floating of the Glasgow Panopticon (Ltd.). After perusal, it brought to my mind fresh memories of the 'Brit.' and the many talented singers and comedians who used to appear in my boyhood's days.

"The lessee, Mr. W. H. Rossborough, in competing against the old Scotia, brought the cream of the profession to the Trongate hall, which proved a decided success financially, for at his decease he left some £30,000.

"Here are a few of the names that made the 'Brit.' such a favourite place of amusement amongst the working classes, from boatyard labourer to the 'toffs' in the big warehouses: George Leybourne, A. G. Vance, Harry Liston, Sam Torr, Fred Albert, Harry Sidney, Harry Rickards, Jolly John Nash, James Taylor (champion comic), John Blanchard, James Fawn, George Ware, W. J. Ashcroft (the Solid Man), J. W. Rowley, J. H. Milburn, Harry Dale, Charles Coborn, Dick Geldard, Horace Wheatley, Jenny Hill, Marie Lawson, Marie Loftus, Ruth Stanley, and Marion Smith.

"Among the old school of entertainers who appeared were Peter Aitken, Alf. Milner, Ben Hoskins, N. C. Bostock (the Comic King), W. G. Ross, and Pat Feeney. Among the black-and-tan warriors were Louis Lindsay, George Washington, Will Parker, Abe Cox, Brown and Newland, and a host of other stars that were at the very top of the ladder of fame in the profession."

A very grave boating disaster occurred in Bournemouth Bay on Sunday, when there were four lives lost, amongst the unfortunate victims being Mr. Arthur H. Burdett, the popular resident-manager of the Boscombe Hippodrome. It appears the party (five in number) went for a sail, and after a time a squall struck the boat and she capsized, throwing all the occupants into the water. Only one man was able to regain the boat, but his efforts exhausted him, rendering him unable to assist his companions, who disappeared one by one, the last to give in being Mr. Burdett. The survivor was picked up by a Bournemouth pleasure steamer on Monday morning.

Mr. Burdett, who was only twenty-six years of age, was most popular in his district. He started his career in the music-hall profession as assistant-manager at Southampton Hippodrome, remaining there for some considerable time. From thence he went to the Portsmouth Hippodrome. In 1908 he took the position as manager at Tunbridge Wells; but, owing to ill-health, ultimately went to Boscombe in December, 1908, when he took over the district-manager's position at the re-opening of the Hippodrome. The deepest sympathy is felt for the relatives in their sad bereavement.

At the moment of going to press Mr. Fred Kitchen informs us by wire of the death of his father, R. H. Kitchen, in his 81st year. We gave some interesting particulars of the deceased gentleman's long career in our issue of June 25.

Griff, the funny conceit, has sent two guineas for the old people in the Music Hall Home.

Mr. Jack Mark Sheridan, son of the popular comedian and patterer, Mark Sheridan, was married by special licence at Sunderland, on the 23rd ult., to Miss Irene Frampton, daughter of Mr. C. H. Frampton, scenic artist. Congratulations.

Earle Reynolds and Nellie Donegan, the famous skaters, sailed on June 22 from New York by the Mauretania for London, to open at the Palace Theatre on Monday for the summer. They reached London early in the week.

Miss Constance Mori produced her clever Chinese dancing scena at the Surrey Theatre on Monday, June 27, and made an enormous success. Result: no vacancies this year. Beecham and Wheeler are arranging this lady's business.

Mr. Edward Lauri and Miss May Beattie, after a short absence from town, return there on Monday, when they will present the brilliant and funny farcical musical comedietta The Lady Bandits to audiences at the Holborn Empire.

Cissie Lawson's new hall, the Camberwell Empire, has been playing to enormous business this week, and opens on Monday with a star company, including La Milo, the beautiful; Cissie Lawson, in A Bride for a Living; the Ten Dixie Girls, and others.

We regret to hear that Mr Hamilton Hill, at one time a most successful baritone vocalist in the London halls, has died in America, leaving wife and child unprovided for. Unfortunately he was not associated at the time of his death with any of the artists' organisations or benefit funds.

Mr. F. V. St. Clair, who is playing the Coliseum, Glasgow, appeared on Monday also at both houses at the local Empire. Though he has appeared over and over again at all the other halls in Glasgow it was his first appearance at the Empire, where his songs were as popular as elsewhere. He was repeatedly recalled.

Mr. F. Warden Reed and Miss Jennie Stevens will start on a fourteen weeks' provincial tour, commencing on Monday next at the Tivoli, Manchester, with their duologue, Married or Photographed? They have in active preparation a new act written by F. Warden Reed and A. E. Mathews, entitled A Day's Racing, which they hope to produce in October.

Mr. Charles Beresford, who has now taken over the management of the Camden Hippodrome, is no stranger to North London, for he has already held positions at the Empire and Marlborough Theatres at Holloway, and we feel sure that his old friends will all welcome him, and that he will add countless new ones at the Camden, where he has quickly settled down.

Graham, the human marionette, who tops the bill at the King's, Gateshead, this week, is drawing big houses there with his "Music Hall: 1875-1910." He has been offered, by the Great Lafayette, a tour of the world, a tempting offer that he has had to refuse, in consequence of being booked solid by Marinelli for the next two and a half years—a sufficiently gratifying testimonial of originality and ability.

Mr. R. G. Knowles, according to the Daily Telegraph, has determined to make New York his permanent residence. He has, indeed, arranged to build a theatre in that city, of which the site alone is to cost £10,000. It will be situated in the Bronx, somewhere about 160th Street. He does not propose, however, to cultivate there the higher forms of drama. His theatre is intended for the cinematograph and vaudeville.

The Stockwell Angling Society, which includes amongst its members many prominent variety artists, recently gave President Redfern, of the New York Nippers, a tremendous reception after his long absence on tour, and two more anglers were added to this fine club's list by the election as members of Messrs. Ben and James Obo, who were sponsored by Mr. Bernard Stavordale. Mr. Wal Pink has been having some tremendous catches of late, he being a prominent member of the club.

The usual weekly meeting of the M.H.A.R.A. committee was held on Wednesday at the offices, with Mr. Harry Blake in the chair. Others present included Messrs. Charles Coborn, J. W. Cragg, H. Cee Mee, Lieut. Albini, Tom Packer, and C. Douglas Stuart. Dr. Lindsay Smith, 102, Cheetham Hill-road, Manchester, was appointed a medical adviser to the Association. The weekly statement showed fifty-four new members and a cash total of £56 5s. Next week's committee meeting will be held on Thursday, because of the fête and gala on the previous day at Rosherville.

Miss Mildred Blanchard will produce this month a new powerful sensational dramatic sketch entitled Nanon Lafarge, specially written for her by Geo. R. Sims. She will be supported by a company of four well-known West-end artists, also some supers. Arrangements have been made for special elaborate scenery and characteristic costumes. An Indian knife-fight takes place, and a genuine full-blooded Indian has been engaged for the part. Mr. George R. Sims says Nanon Lafarge is the strongest dramatic work he has ever written.

Mr. Douglas Stuart, Secretary of the Variety Artists' Benevolent Fund, writes:—"It has become increasingly and regrettably common lately for certain of our daily newspapers to publish with great detail utterly unfounded and injurious statements which do grave injustice to the unselfish work which has been done for many years and is still being carried on by the committees of the Variety Artists' Benevolent Fund and the Music Hall Ladies' Guild on behalf of the poor of our class. Of course, journalism has its requirements, but it has also its responsibilities, and one of the latter is to refrain from hastily issuing ex parte statements calculated to do great harm to organised charitable effort.

"The most recent case is that of the late Mme. Senyah. This case had been fully considered and largely helped, especially by the last-named institution, but we find in the papers only such accounts as would lead outsiders to imagine that those artists who professed to assist their more unfortunate brethren had been singularly wanting in their duty. A very little inquiry would prove to these hasty scribes that such suggestions are entirely unwarranted by the facts as they really are.

I need not take up your valuable space by giving particulars as to the case I have quoted, but I am desired, through you, to assure all and sundry that every case which comes under our observation is relieved to such extent as our funds will permit and the circumstances appear to warrant. Our committee members give up their time cheerfully and bring their knowledge and experience to bear upon the work of administering faithfully the funds which are entrusted to them, and it does not appear too much to ask that their really charitable efforts should not be hampered and discounted by those whose professed intention and obvious duty are to help on to the right."

Sam Glenroy has once again lost his well-known bull-terrier dog Bob, whose permanent address is The Era office. Should any artist come across him in their travels please notify his owner.

Mr. George Robey has arranged for the Kilties' Band (twice commanded to perform before his late Majesty King Edward VII.) to appear this week at the Empire, Tonypandy, and in the Park on Sunday afternoon and evening prior to their departure for America.

Miss Gwennie Hasto, the charming fancy dancer, produced at the Empire, Stratford, June 17, a very quaint and original number, "Miss Robinson Jones," written and composed by Walter Emerson and Gilbert Wells with which she is scoring heavily on the Stoll tour.

Mr. Edward Sillward, the famous animal impersonator, who plays the dog in Peter Pan, is by way of producing, at the Tottenham Palace on Monday next, a new and original fantasy entitled Le Gorille, written by himself and produced by Harry Grattan. He will be assisted by Miss Pauline Prim.

Last week burglars paid a visit to the Theatre Royal, Atterciffe. They smashed open a brand new hamper, belonging to Miss Della Ray, turned out all her beautiful new dresses, and appropriated a suit belonging to her husband, Harry Kent (brother of Duncan and Godfrey). The culprits were disturbed before they had time to commit further depredations.

A dramatic licence has been again refused for the Palace Music Hall, Durham. On behalf of Mr. T. C. Rawes, the proprietor, some 3,400 people in and out of Durham asked that the licence might be granted. Canon Greenwell, who presided over the bench of "the great unpaid," said that nine magistrates declined to grant the licence, and he did not see how they could reverse their decision. The bench, however, concurred in the grant of a cinematograph licence.

We regret to announce the death, on Friday last, after a prolonged and painful illness, of Albert Burrows Smith, the only son of H. Burrows Smith, the variety agent. The interment took place on Wednesday in Greenford Park Cemetery. Among the wreaths sent were those from his parents' old friends Fred Maxwell and Lois Du Cane, Mr. and Mrs. Coombes and his old schoolfellow William Coombes, and Miss Amy Milton, who followed with the bereaved parents.

Miss Clara Wieland's long absence from England is due to her great success in America, where she is also known as Mary Ann Brown. At her recent reappearance at Henderson's, New York, her success was instantaneous. Miss Wieland's songs are all of the rollicking English type, and her many changes of costume are pretty. She has capital songs in "I'd rather be like Pa" and "You've got to get off and walk." Her series of impersonations includes Fay Templeton, Vesta Victoria, Anna Held, and George M. Cohan, the much-impersonated Yankee comedian.

For July 4 (Monday) the Palace Theatre programme is quite cosmopolitan. America is represented by that dainty actress Miss Fannie Ward, in the new sketch entitled An Unlucky Star; Mr. Bert Levy, the famous caricaturist; and Radford and Winchester, comedy jugglers. The artistic interests of Russia are in the keeping of Mlle. Anna Pavlova, M. Mordkin, and company of Russian dancers; and England has in Mr. Barclay Gammon (accompanied by a piano), Mr. Arthur Prince (the clever ventriloquial entertainer), and Mr. J. P. Ling (comedian), a sufficiently versatile trio.

The Sunday Defence Committee have decided to hold a meeting on Friday, July 22, at Terry's Theatre, by kind permission of Mr. Edward Terry, from one to three o'clock, for the purpose of considering the Sunday entertainment question in its new aspect, arising out of the decision of Mr. Cecil Chapman and the proceedings initiated by the Cinematograph Defence League in convening a meeting of the managers' and proprietors' Associations to consider the opening on Sundays of all kinds of theatres.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, M.P., will preside, and representatives of various societies will be asked to speak, including many of the honorary vice-presidents of the Sunday Defence Committee. Actors, variety artists, musicians, and employees are urged, in their own interests, to attend this meeting and support the following resolution:—"That, in order to avert the imposition of a seven days' working week upon actors, artists, musicians, and employees, this meeting declares it to be imperative that the licence of any place licensed for public amusement should prohibit the opening of such premises on Sunday by way of trade or personal gain."

Mr. W. H. Clemart, chairman of the V.A.F. and the Sunday Defence Committee, will propose this resolution. Members of the Variety Artists' Federation, the Actors' Association, the Amalgamated Musicians' Union, and the National Association of Theatrical Employees, will be admitted on showing their card of membership. Tickets will be obtainable from the hon. secretary, Wm. Johnson, at 29, Wellington-street, W.C.

Miss Mabel Mavis, the justly celebrated glassophone soloist and exponent of many musical novelties, is continuing her successful tour of the provincial towns and cities. She has lately purchased of Mr. James Elliott, of the renowned Elliott and Savona Troupe, a peculiar musical instrument called the "Moreamba," a species of xylophone, with certain attachments as resonators, giving greatly increased power and volume to the tone. To the playing of this with the right hand, she accompanies herself on the piano with the left. Mr. Harry Burns, the hustling provincial agent, has brought upon himself the thanks of this talented lady for his energetic and successful endeavours in the way of booking.

An ex-painter named Williams, now performing as a tight-rope walker under the style of "The Great Houndin," had a terrible experience recently during the progress of a big carnival at Niagara Falls. The day was being observed as a civic holiday by the twin cities of Niagara Falls, and Williams had arranged to furnish a thrilling termination to the afternoon's merrymaking by executing a "slide for life" across the gorge from the American to the Canadian shore, hanging by his teeth from the sloping wire which he had had suspended between the cliffs. Through a miscalculation, however, he stopped short in the middle of his slide, and was only rescued after half an hour of agony, shared by the crowds who were watching him.

The new version of the Empire Theatre revue, Hullo! London, is to be replete with novel scenes and parodies on Monday next. Mr. J. F. M'Ardle will appear as Jimmy Valentine in the great safe-opening scene, while Mr. Fred Leslie will be Sherlock Holmes; besides this Mr. Fred Leslie will appear in conjunction with Mr. Roberts, Miss Maud Jay, and Miss Frances Kapstown in a skit upon the village players. Mr. M'Ardle has two numbers, and Miss Valli Valli—around whom the revue is now developed—besides her very important waltz song, will have her parody on Miss Gertie Millar's successful duet, in which she will have the support of Mr. Ralph Roberts as "Teddy" Payne, and a new number dealing with the delights of the latest dance, "The Boston."

Mr. David Taylor is the managing director of the Tonypandy Hippodrome, the resident-manager under him being Mr. Will Pearson.

Two cheques for £60 each, the proceeds of a charity matinée on May 2 at the Camden Hippodrome, were handed during the performance in the second house there on Monday to the Mayor of St. Pancras (Councillor Bryan), for division between the St. Pancras Female Orphanage and the Home for Aged Poor. His Worship, in a brief speech, thanked the artists, the staff, and Mr. Walter Gibbons.

A rowing and athletic club has been inaugurated at the Spread Eagle, Lambeth-road, in connection with which a double sculling race took place on Sunday last from Blackfriars Bridge to Lambeth Bridge, which resulted in a most exciting finish, witnessed by a large number of people on the bridge and Embankment who became most enthusiastic. A four-oared race has been arranged for Sunday next, from Vauxhall Bridge to Westminster Bridge to start at 12 noon. All performers interested in rowing should obtain particulars of the club from the hon. secretary, T. Cavill (Cavill's Agency) at the Spread Eagle. The president is Major G. Houghton Gastrell, M.P.

Lions, tigers, yaks, dromedaries, and other animals, comprising the Crystal Palace menagerie, are to be sold by auction on July 14. There are ninety-eight lots catalogued, including the famous African lion Prince and his sire Sultan. An Indian jackal, a grizzly bear—Old Darkie—a Canadian wolf, and a llama are also to be sold. Several macaws, cockatoos, and parrakeets, some of which are described as "good talkers," are to be included in the auction.

The Alhambra management is to be congratulated on having secured the services of the young American girl, who sings under the name of Signorina Corona. Born in New York of Irish-American parents, Gracia Clere (Signorina Corona), eight years ago sung before Mme. Melba, who advised her to secure the best possible European tuition, and the gifted young American went straight to Rome, where she took up her training as the protégée of the First Secretary of the American Embassy in that city.

After four years of steady training her voice was pronounced finished enough for grand opera. Before she had reached the age of nineteen years she had sung in every opera house in Italy, and twice in private before the King and Queen of Italy. Her principal successes were in Carmen, Linda, Rigoletto, La Bohème, Lohengrin, and Fra Diavolo. Having no engagements in Italy till the opening of the Pergola Opera House in Florence, Miss Clere came to London, and, unequipped with introductions, sought an audition from Mr. Alfred Moul at the Alhambra. Mr. Moul, who is an experienced authority on things musical, immediately recognised the rare quality of her voice and the finish of her methods, and thereupon engaged her for two months.

The fête and gala at Rosherville Gardens on Wednesday gives every promise, providing the weather is fine, of being one of the greatest open-air entertainments ever organised in the variety world. The following favourites have kindly consented to appear either in the afternoon or evening:—Misses Gertie Gitana, Clarice Vance, Maidie Scott, Lil Hawthorne, Marie Kendall, Adele Levey, Maie Hoey, May Moore Duprez, Alexandra Dagmar, Maude Mortimer, Dora Challoner, Marie Blythe, Constance Moxon, Florrie Robina, Katie Cohen, Lily Rouletta, Jessie Albini; and Messrs. Joe Elvin, G. H. Chirgwin, Harry Tate, Neil Kenyon (if possible), Charles Coborn, Albert Christian, Steve McCarthy, Harry Weldon, Herbert Shelley, Bert Marsden, Harry Brown, Bosanquet, Gilbert Girard, Edwin Barwick, Ernest Rees, Pat Carey, Fred Greville, Ross and Grayson, Pender Troupe, and Keen and Waller. The latest recruits to the programme are Mr. George Ali and Mr. Whit Cunliffe.

The band of the Royal Marines has been specially engaged; a classical concert will be given in the Italian Gardens; Mr. Jack Collinson and company will perform the dire drama of Maria Martin in the Richardson Theatre at frequent intervals; Lieut. Albini will give an entertainment of conjuring and handcuffing; Jack Straw's Castle of Mystery will draw many of the inquisitive; Mme. Dolores, the charming lady palmist and clairvoyant, will have a tent in which to tell everyone's past, present, and future; the magic caves will be illuminated; and Jeapes' well-known cinematograph pictures will be on exhibition, and in the ballroom there will be hourly sessions of dancing. The admission price will be sixpence, as usual.

There are several ways of getting to Rosherville, all at the same price. For one shilling and ninepence (this sum including the sixpence admission) the visitor can either take train from Charing Cross, Waterloo Junction, Cannon Street, or London Bridge, by the South-Eastern and Chatham Railway by certain cheap trains to Gravesend, or he can go from Fenchurch Street, Stepney, or Burdett Road for the same money by any train on the London, Tilbury, and Southend to Tilbury and cross by the ferry; or, again, he can avail himself or herself of the new City Steamboat Co.'s steamers leaving Westminster, Charing Cross, and London Bridge Piers either morning or afternoon, direct to Rosherville Pier, thus enjoying a two hours' trip on the river each way, and all for 1s. 9d. The above tickets can be obtained by writing to the Hon. Directors, Messrs. Woodrow and Stuart, 18, Charing Cross-road, W.C.

When the theatrical season is in full swing in Paris artists and playwrights are too busy to devote much time to quarrelling, and they, therefore, wait till the end of June to start hostilities. This year the one to open the ball was M. Georges Courteline, a clever and witty playwright; and the decision given by the Court of Cassation is important in so far as it has a direct bearing on author's rights in respect to cinematographs. The case, which aroused a certain amount of interest, is as follows: Cinematographs in Paris are plentiful, and within the last few years there has already been trouble between them and authors and theatres for the infringement of copyright. M. Courteline, having come to the conclusion that a cinematographic play, called Ta Femme te Trompe, bore a family likeness to his well-known comedy Boubouroche, brought an action against the management of that show for piracy. When the case came on for hearing the Court found for the plaintiff. The defendants having appealed to a higher Court, the latter reversed the judgment and decided in favour of the defendants, ruling that in both plays there was a husband, a wife, and the latter's lover who hides in a cupboard, elements that may be called common property in the theatrical world. This ruling created some excitement in the playwright's world, and M. Courteline then carried the case to the Court of Cassation. The judges there rejected M. Courteline's appeal, holding that there was not sufficient similarity between Boubourocha and Ta Femme te Trompa to justify an action for piracy. M. Courteline, therefore, lost his case; yet dramatic authors here are delighted, for the Court, having delivered judgment, referred to the question of law, and said "that an author's rights in a dramatic production extends to any reproduction of the scenes of the piece on a cinematograph."

SONGS, WRITERS, AND SINGERS.

MR. G. H. ELLIOTT, who at Walsall has been captivating all hearers by his fine renditions of Lester Barrett and Hermann E. Darewski's "There's a little black cupid in the moon," and Alf. J. Lawrance's "Mr. Owl," has had the gratifying intelligence that his song "I used to sigh for the silvery moon" is becoming the rage of New York, it having been introduced into that bright revue The Follies of 1910. Messrs. Francis and Day publish all three of these favourite numbers.

MISS ETHEL LEVEY, at the Alhambra, has been singing those fine songs of Messrs. Francis and Day's "Miss O'Hara and her emerald tiara" and "I've got rings on my fingers," with great success, and has, in addition, been creating her usual furore with "Pride of the prairie Mary," which is also issued by the firm.

MISS MADGE TEMPLE opens at the Oxford on Monday, when she will be heard in that fine chorus song, "On the silvery, silvery sands." The item is issued by Mr. David Day's firm.

AT the Hackney Empire Miss Nell Emerald has been singing with the greatest possible success Messrs. Francis and Day's song, "My pony boy." It is a very fine number, and Miss Emerald sings it charmingly.

MR. FRED BARNES is at Hackney this week, and is specially featured both on bills and programmes for his fine song "The scapegrace of the family." There is great inquiry for this number, which is published by Messrs. Francis and Day.

ERNIE MAYNE has again set them crazy at New Cross this week with the production of a new song, entitled "Pork and rabbit." The audience got it in once, yelled the chorus, and shrieked at the funny verses. That it is a big winner there is no doubt. It is by Alf. Ellerton.

FROM Messrs. W. Morley and Co., 6, Great Portland-street, W., comes a song entitled "Young England," by Richard B. Mason, words by Lord Norton. The song is dedicated by permission to Sir George Reid, High Commissioner, Premier first Federal Parliament of Australia. The song, as the title suggests, is patriotic in subject, and has a fine, stirring refrain, well shown by the following lines:—

"True to the colours, lad,
Red, White, and Blue,
Britons for ever, lad,
Brave hearts and true."

The song is in two keys, F (compass C to D) and G (compass D to E).

MISS DOROTHY WARD, the charming musical comedy actress, and principal boy in last season's pantomime at the Prince of Wales's, Birmingham, is playing a short season on the halls. Last week at the Empire, Liverpool, and this week at the Empire, Glasgow, she has literally made "the hit of the bill" with A. J. Mills and Bennett Scott's beautiful chorus ballad, "I wonder if you care?" The Star Music Co. publish this number in keys to suit all voices. Concert artists note.

GEORGE LASHWOOD'S many admirers will be glad to know he has secured another of those epoch-making songs for which he has become famous. This "newest and best" has been written by A. J. Mills and Bennett Scott, and is entitled "The Moonlight Promenade." The chorus is one of the kind you have to sing whether you want to or not, and the verses and ever-changing couplets are brimful of real humour. This is going to be another typical Star Music Co. winner.

TOM COSTELLO has secured from A. J. Mills and Bennett Scott a witty number with a polka time melody, called "The Skirt," and satirises this indispensable garment in a truly humorous manner. To see the genial Tom in evening dress careering round the huge stage of the London Coliseum, gracefully embracing a dainty silk skirt, is a sight for the gods—not to mention the rest of the house. The Star Co. will shortly issue this number.

"THE BOY POET."

Dramatic Chapter, in One Act, by Brian Daly. Produced at the Putney Hippodrome, on Monday, June 27.

Chatterton .....MR. PAUL LOVETT
Lady Constance Heseltine ..MISS MARY LOVETT
Widow Winlove .....MISS VIOLET GREVILLE

The programme this week at Putney is made notable by the production of what is described as a dramatic chapter, in one act, entitled The Boy Poet, written by Brian Daly and presented by Paul Lovett, late of the Royalty Theatre. Of plot there is but little, the sketch being merely an effective picture of the last few hours in the life of Chatterton—"the marvellous boy who perished in his pride." The curtain rises on the room occupied by the poet, and from the garrulous old landlady we learn of his extreme poverty and of his sleepless nights. As, however, "all poets are mad," in her opinion, she fails to realise how dangerous a thing she is doing when she gives him some laudanum with which to induce sleep. During their conversation there arrives Lady Constance Heseltine, who, scorning the conventions, has sought out the poet for the purpose of helping him out of his difficulties. In answer to her direct question he admits that an accusation made against him at their last meeting is true, and though she leaves him to fetch money to relieve his immediate necessities, we know that the iron has entered his soul, and that the end is near. The last straw is the loss of his linnet, which he finds dead in its cage. It had been his sole companion, and in his state of mind he sees in the incident another stroke of fate. The laudanum left by the landlady is used as a means to escape from the world and its frets, and Lady Heseltine returns only in time to see him die.

Mr. Paul Lovett as Chatterton gave a careful and consistent rendering of the poet, though hardly suggesting his youth—he was only nineteen; Miss Mary Lovett as Lady Constance Heseltine and Miss Violet Greville as the Widow Winlove were both admirable in the respective parts. A very cordial reception was accorded to these fine players, and we are confident that wherever the little sketch is produced it will meet with favour. It is easily and naturally written, and its essentially human note is a welcome relief from many of the sketches one sees nowadays.

A great welcome on Monday awaited the ever-popular Harry Tate in his new Flying absurdity. Harry being interviewed by the local reporter, and afterwards replying to an address of welcome from the Mayor is screamingly funny. A welcome turn, full of snap and go, was provided by the Kennedy Girls. There is not a dull moment all through, and they give the impression of enjoying it all as much as do the audience. Some very clever dancing was done by Tiny and Mite, two diminutive artists who have some neat steps. Fred Lincoln, in his comedy character creation; Madge Allen, comedienne; Norton Folgate, a twenty-stone sailor boy; and the Maples, in a burglar skit, also appeared. The Bioscope showed some telling pictures based on Victor Hugo's "Les Misérables." The music at Putney is always delightful under the able direction of Mr. Edward Leicester.

THE PALACE.

Miss Fannie Ward, an American born actress, who has won many successes on this side of the pond, made her reappearance on Monday at the Palace Theatre—where all the leading West-End actors and actresses go in their turn—in what may be called a spoof tragedietta, by Ray Cooper Megrue—

"AN UNLUCKY STAR."

Peggy Star .....MISS FANNIE WARD
Julia .....MISS MARGARET HASTINGS
Peggy's Husband .....MR. PHILIP KNOX
Billy .....MR. JOHN M. DEAN
An Author .....MR. WM. H. BOYD

We were given to understand that the plot was the subject of a good deal of mystery, and that the audience would be not only thrilled but surprised. With a jealous husband, Peggy Star, an actress, should have been more frigid in her relations with Billy, an admirer, an irresponsible being who puts no rein upon his inclinations. Billy is very rash, and when he comes to Peggy's boudoir at the Ritz in defiance of her wishes, we naturally see trouble ahead. The husband has preceded Billy, but conceals himself, and the pair proceed with their conversation uninterruptedly. Billy makes love, and though Peggy protests and resists, she eventually falls into his arms. A noise is heard, Billy draws his revolver, resolved to shoot first. With an anxious look at the door, and six-shooter in hand, he waits. The husband approaches him in the rear, also with a six-shooter, then comes an interruption from the supposed author in the stalls. He is not at all satisfied with the way the crucial situation is led up to, and an altercation ensues between the trio—leading lady, leading man, and author. The lady suggests that she should shoot her husband. She is quite sure that she will have the sympathy of many of her lady friends in front, who have come to assist at the rehearsal, and are anxious for her to get on with it. Other uncomplimentary things are said, and eventually the leading lady in a dismantled scene has to retire discomfited. Miss Fannie Ward worked up the excitement to concert pitch on the night of our visit, and looked very handsome in a pretty dress of heliotrope. Mr. John M. Dean, a capital actor, was sufficiently warm and impassioned as the lover; and Mr. Philip Knox was quite effective as the husband, the author's indignation and sarcasm being amusingly interpreted by Mr. William H. Boyd.

Miss Kittee Rayburn, who has happily recovered from a bad attack of influenza and laryngitis, made her first appearance at the Shaftesbury-avenue house on Monday, when she asserted her charming individuality in an up-to-date song, "The girl in the Chantecler hat," a distracting headgear that makes on think naturally of one's best girl being "feather-brained." But fashion dictates and woman obeys—bless her, and if her obedience brings about such an agreeable result as presented by Miss Kittee, the mere man should be the last to grumble. And this brings us to the consideration of the comedienne's second song, "It's a' over with the men," the verses of which tell in the drollest manner of some of the possible happenings to the man when the weaker (?) sex are "endowed" with the vote. This song, like Hamlet's play, has no offence in it, but treats in a light vein a burning question of the day. Mr Barclay Gammon at the piano has revived "Three little Suffragettes are we," written by Fred Bowyer, and met on Monday evening with some interruption. Mr. Bert Levy has come back to renew his popularity in drawing and caricaturing; Mr. Arthur Prince has returned to his maritime ventriloquial monologué; Miss Anna Pavlovna and Michael Mordkin continue the Saison Russe with great success.

Lawson and Namon are ball-punchers and bicyclists—the lady does the punching, the mere man rides the bike. She is particularly attractive and smart—a fine figure of a woman; and he has quaint notions of fun that tickle the house. The show is decidedly popular. So is that presented by Radford and Winchester, American comedy jugglers, with trick scenery and properties and heaps of humour. Miss Mary Grey's singing is delightful; and Mr. Herman Finck has arranged a new pot-pourri of melodies selected from the répertoire of the Follies. This is appropriately entitled Pélissiana.

THE TIVOLI.

The fame of Mr. Herbert Sleath as an actor on the regular stage has been associated with the delineation of characters both picturesque and strenuous, but we remember that on his first appearance in variety at the Palace Theatre a year or so since, with his charming wife, Miss Ellis Jeffreys, he made a most agreeable impression in light comedy. He has now made an arrangement with Mr. Arthur Bourchier and Mr. Charles Frohman, whereby he is able to do a turn at the Tivoli in conjunction with playing his part in Glass Houses at the Globe Theatre. At the Strand hall he is delighting Mr. Joseph Wilson's numerous patrons by the presentation of

"THE LITTLEST GIRL."

Carruthers .....MR. WM. F. GRANT
Hon. Jimmy Leyland .....MR. HERBERT SLEATH

The story opens with the Hon. Jimmy Leyland carrying into the chambers of Carruthers the sleeping form of a little girl, who has been playing a fairy queen in pantomime. Jimmie pities the child, and every sentence he speaks to Carruthers shows his strong antipathy to the appearance of young children on the stage. Carruthers is not at all pleased with the philosophy of his visitor, whom he thinks may do a good deal of needless harm in one evening, but who, when older, will be more considerate and less likely to interfere with other people's affairs. Jimmy admits that he has done the unconventional thing, but he has done it for the sake of the child. Carruthers is not to be turned from his mood of bitterness. He talks of his marriage to Ida Clare, a dancer, and the wretchedness that was its sequel. He does not want to see the child again; but, of course, the parental instinct asserts itself, and when the curtains close in on the scene the still sleeping child is in the father's arms. The play is pretty enough, but scarcely dramatic. It is exceedingly well acted by Mr. Herbert Sleath as the Hon. Jimmy Leyland and Mr. Wm. F. Grant as Carruthers, and the mounting of the apartment in which the action takes place is very tasteful and complete.

An artist new to the London variety stage is Smith (?), who recently made a great success as one of the rulers in Two Merry Monarchs at the Strand. Smith appears in petticoats, and as a gushing spinster patters very amusingly, being assisted by an alleged "dude" from the audience, who have given the newcomer a series of hearty welcomes during the week. Smith is a credit to his very large family, and should go far in the variety world. Mr. Frank Lawton, the whistler of The Belle of New York, in which he originally played at the Shaftesbury Theatre the part of Blinky Bill, the "mixed ale pugilist," goes well in his scena; Mr. Herbert Clifton gives a couple of imitations successfully; and Mr. Will E. Stepit, in a remarkable display of acrobatism, brings down the house.

Other popular contributors to the bill are the incomparable Cinquevalli, Liane d'Eve, the charming Parisian chanteuse and dancer; the Gotham Quartette of musical eccentrics; Mary Law, a young violinist of exceptional ability; Madoline Rees; Ella Shields; the Five Orioles, in song and dance; Miss Ida Barr; the Two Bobs; Miss Gladys Huxley, and the Westbrooks, the whole constituting an interesting company.

THE BEDFORD.

The genial resident-manager, Mr. Arthur Edwards, always finds plenty of support from the Camden Town people, who are always ready to enjoy the good fare provided for them. This week, on visiting this hall, we found a good all-round bill, with Miss Marie Kendall at the head, and providing a fine répertoire of songs for the delectation of her numerous admirers. Miss Kendall had a rousing reception, and her coster song especially went with a bang. Harry Bonville has a song, "Send them along to me," which has a rousing chorus, which soon finds favour, and is lustily sung by the gods. Always sure of a good reception is Miss Queenie Essex, who sings most charmingly. On this occasion she sings a song about the popular craze, "Rinking," which has a melodious refrain.

Hayman and Ritter are presenting the National Trio in a farcical scena, The Troublesome Boy, which caused amusement. It is, however, not particularly funny, though the company, including Mr. Harry Pleon, jun., worked hard with somewhat poor material. A very popular turn

FRANCIS AND DAY OUTING.

The sun has smiled consistently on the excursions of the famous firm of music publishers hitherto, but on Saturday last, when the ninth annual outing was celebrated, Phœbus withdrew his patronage from the occasion, and the party were fain to dwell upon the delights that might have been. A particularly pretty spot had been selected in Batchworth Heath, a rural eminence close by Harrow-on-the-Hill, whither the staff, having sounded a chord in an appropriately minor key, journeyed by reserved carriages from Marylebone. Soon after arrival, however, clouds dimmed the sky, and the party were forced to seek the shelter of Ye Olde Greene Manne Hotel, which formed the headquarters for the day. The excursionists bore themselves with becoming fortitude under distressing circumstances. "We'll make the best of it; you leave it to us," said one optimistic employee, and there was every evidence that they did, the piano being set merrily going and thunderclaps being drowned in "Sixpenny Pops." Occasionally the weather brightened, and between the showers it was quite a cheerful sight to see Mr. Eyke, the Izaak Walton of the company, preparing bait for a small boy who was fishing in the village pond.

The dinner hour arrived when the storm was at its height, and the committee were publicly thanked for arranging it so opportunely. Mr. Charles Wilmot in the chair was flanked by Mr. David Day, the guest of honour, and Mr. Charles Plucknett. Mr. William Eyke held the vice-chair, and among those present were Messrs. Lester Barrett, Edgar Bateman, Fred Leigh and H. B. Pether, Hermann Darewski, Murphy and Lipton, Wm. and Arthur Francis, and John Abbott.

A much-appreciated interlude was furnished after dinner, when Mr. Charles W. Taylor, who, under the name of "Cee Tee," wields so facile a pencil in studies in black and white, sang a sonnet of his own composition. As it deals with well-known men we make no excuse for reproducing the essay almost in its entirety:—

I'd like to say how pleased I am
To be with you to-day,
I've read of all your outings
In your paper E R A,
I'd like to thank your genial chief
For his kindly thought of me,
He knows I love composers, for
I thought one I should be.

I used to worship from afar
Professor Pether's art,
And when he shook me by the hand
It seemed a joy apart.
We have foregathered in a pub,
And many times I've said,
I mean to call him Harry, once
Before I'm really dead.

To get in touch with Mr. Leigh
I had to form a plan,
I made mistakes in spelling, for,
This lyric-writing man,
He had to overhaul his work.
I saw him, and he said,
How pleased he was to see me—
Well, I nearly called him Fred

Now what do you think of Lester B.,
Rotund, robust, and bright?
You cannot count the crowd who roar
His choruses at night.
And what do you think of Darewski, H.,
Who takes you by the ear,
And leads you through melodic realms?
The lyre's always near.

Now, what do you think of the Cockney bard,
Who makes all London laugh,
Then goes into the provinces
With fishing tales and chaff?
He's equally good at sentiment,
Of course at fun he's fine,
He's something when your pen can put
A laugh in every line.

Now what do you think of Wilmot, Charles?
Six feet of versatile,
A business bard, a versic card,
Writes sonnets by the mile.
He'll tell you that the guv'nor's out
With a steady vacant stare,
And tell you to call in a year or two,
And he will not turn a hair.

I should like to dedicate a verse
To a friend I knew in youth,
When both as boys we played the flute,
Bob Burridge knows the truth.
I hope my old friend, David Day,
Will annually decide,
When you invite him out again,
To have me by his side.

After the loyal toast had been honoured, the chairman said they all looked forward to the opportunity of showing how they received the toast of Francis, Day, and Hunter. (Cheers.) He did not want to keep them out of the sunshine (laughter), but he could not allow the afternoon to pass without expressing the feeling of loyalty that animated them towards the chief of the firm. They knew how much their success in life was bound up with the firm; its success meant their success, and they were determined to do all they could in their various departments to assist that good work. In all vicissitudes, Francis, Day, and Hunter still retained their proud pre-eminence, and they hoped it would always continue. That would be gained by their loyal adherence to business principles, coupled with Mr. Day's wonderful charm and courtesy, to which the prosperity of the enterprise was, in a large measure, due, and which won the admiration of all who came in touch with him. They could congratulate themselves on the fact that the business was increasing, and the sale of the Annual pointed to something like a record year being achieved. (Cheers.) They missed the presence of Mr. Fred Day; but they knew he was with them in heart, and they hoped he was having as good a time as ever, and was helping to make the firm of T. B. Harms and Francis, Day, and Hunter as big a success in New York as the parent firm was in London. He would ask them to drink success to the firm, coupled with the toast of Mr. David Day—a jolly good fellow.

Mr. Day received an affectionate demonstration when he rose to respond. He tendered his most sincere thanks for the very hearty way in which they had greeted the toast. His response would be a very simple one. The success of Francis, Day, and Hunter, which had obtained in the past, and which they wished to continue, was due, and would be due, to the loyalty of the staff. (Hear, hear.)

The vice-chairman proposed the toast of "The Visitors," coupling with it the names of Mr. Charles W. Plucknett, Mr. Charles Taylor, and Mr. Edgar White, the representative of The Era, adding that it was a great pleasure indeed to welcome such friends of the firm, and those they had known for many years.

Further harmony reigned during the afternoon, Mr. Herbert Lucas displaying promising comedy methods in the singing of "Setting the village on fire," and various members of the staff exercising a talent for improvising on the piano. The evening was fortunately fine, and the party found compensation in cricket, rounders, and other games. The committee, it should be added, were Messrs. W. Francis, F. Redmond, and F. Abbott.

MR. FRANK COYLE, the now successful variety agent, having so much business to do, is removing to more spacious offices after next week, and on July 11 and after his address will be 1, Cross Flatts-drive, Beeston, Leeds, where all business will be transacted.

SONGS, WRITERS, AND SINGERS.

Messrs. B. Feldman and Co. have a great chorus song, entitled "Let's have a little bit of sunshine," written and composed by Mr. Glover-Kind. Mr. Fred Barnes is the sole singer. It is rather early to speak of pantomime, but if a song can possibly be judged before, we should say this will be one of the biggest pantomime numbers of the year.

Mr. Fred Barnes has secured the rights of a very big comedy chorus song, entitled "What's the matter with father?" published by Messrs. B. Feldman and Co.

At the Empire, Glasgow, during the current week Miss Dorothy Ward has been the recipient of unstinted applause for her delightful rendering of Mellor and Gifford's new chorus song, "Everywhere I go I'll leave my heart with you," one of the most "likely" songs published by Messrs. B. Feldman and Co. for some time past.

Mr. Fred Barnes, at the Empire, Hackney, this week, has been duplicating the stupendous success he achieved all round the provincial Stoll houses, with J. Glover-Kind's sterling comedy number, "I'd rather be by the fireside," which Feldman's publish.

Miss Gertie Gitana, who returns to town on Monday next, will make a speciality of the new chorus song, "I was coming through the corn, Molly, dear," by Mellor, Lawrance, and Gifford, which has earned her vociferous encores in every provincial town she has visited recently. This is another Feldman "winner."

Mr. Arthur Aldridge returns to the London Pavilion next Monday, where he will specially "feature" John P. Harrington and William Hargreaves' new ballad, "All in a day." Mr. Aldridge will also, of course, again sing Feldman's big ballad hit "Beautiful garden of roses" at the same house.

Miss Ella Shields has been received with acclaim at the Tivoli and her other turns this week in her spirited renderings of William Hargreaves' two fine songs, "In the Army" and "Come by the drum in the big brass band." At the Oxford Miss Shields will, on Monday week, specially produce a new chorus song by John P. Harrington and William Hargreaves, entitled "Remember me to the boys you see." Messrs Feldman publish all three of Miss Shields' songs.

Miss Ada Reeve has had a great success throughout the whole of her recent Stoll tour in the song of sentiment from the pen of Chas. K. Harris, "Nobody knows—nobody cares." At every town she has visited the pathetic and eminently tuneful chorus has become the property of the "man in the street," and Feldman and Co., the publishers, have again hit the bull's-eye of public approval with this charming successor to "Somewhere."

At the Gaiety Theatre, Burnley, this week, in the Irish-comedy drama My Irish Molly, according to a letter just received by Feldman and Co. from Mr. Karl Edwards, who plays the principal comedy part therein, Messrs. Rogers and Neat's chorus-song, "Do you miss me in the dear homeland?" is the hit of the piece. Another song of Feldman's, "Put off all your troubles till to-morrow," is being introduced into the same play this week.

Messrs. John P. Harrington and John Neat's comedy chorus number, "Oh, boys, I've seen you there," which Feldman and Co. publish, has proved a great pierrot success; and Miss Lena Pinaud has been specially successful with it at Great Yarmouth in Chappell's Ring, where she is singing it to the accompaniment of tumultuous applause.

Carrick's Entertainers, at Weymouth, are singing a number of the Feldman publications. Specially successful are "Pretty little girl from Nowhere," "I'm longing for someone to love me," and "Georgie took me walking in the park," all sung by Miss Beattie Moore; "I wonder if it's true?" and "Somewhere," sung by Miss Jennie Mackay; "I do like to be beside the seaside" and "I want to roller-skate, Johnny," sung by Mr. Bobbie Hall; and "I must go home to-night," sung by Mr. Percy Agutter.

Messrs. John P. Harrington, E. W. Rogers, and Orlando Powell have just supplied Miss Hetty King with a song speciality, entitled "I suppose—she knows." Miss King will produce the same trio of writers' new policeman song, "I'm afraid you'll have to come along o' me," on Monday next. They are executing several other special commissions for the same artist.

THE GRAND, CLAPHAM.

Light entertainment, appropriate to the season, is provided at the pretty hall at Clapham Junction, which has long been under the rule of Mr. Walter Gibbons. The principal item of the bill is furnished by Bloomsbury Burglars, the funny sketch wherein the irrepressible Jerry and "Nobbler" were first introduced to the public. The sketch, with its droll situations and sensational finish, proves as diverting as ever, Mr. Lew Lake as Nobbler and Mr. Bob Morriss as Jerry, the two resourceful window-cleaners who turn burglars, revelling in the fun of the production. Mr. Harry Lavers is again the owner of the burgled house, and Miss Kitty Wilmore effectively realises the designing lady who commissions the inseparable pair to do their nefarious work.

A merry time is spent in the company of Mr. Sammy Shields, whose unlimited patter keeps the audience in continuous mirth. The comedian has amusing references to cricket, but speedily gets back to the football that has won him fame. Mr. Shields cuts quite a smart figure in his Chesterfield of Mackenzie tartan, and his popularity at Clapham is great. The Six Buster Browns remind one forcibly of the coons who minister to the entertainments at seaside resorts at this period of the year. Dressed in smart suits they give a variety of songs and dances, one of the gentlemen excelling in some varied and well-executed footplay.

Novel methods of making music are employed by the Hungaria Trio, the gentleman playing an instrument resembling the dulcimer, and two young ladies being seated at piano-shaped arrangements, from which they produce a sweet-toned chiming accompaniment. Pleasing melodies are thus rendered, the most effective being "Men of Harlech," which is given as an encore. Miss Daisy Hurdle is a dainty singer, and renders with praiseworthy distinctness the affecting ditty, "Write me every day," the humour of which she brings out with much point. The programme also includes Larry Lewis, in comedy concoctions; Goggin and Davis, grotesques; Bert Woodward, the steeple-chasing cyclist; and Baby Boden, comedienne and dancer. The Bioscope is responsible for an amusing series of pictures. Mr. Fred C. Cockerill remains in his position as manager, but is at present away on holiday, and Mr. Frank Bradsell is a skilful musical-director.

The latest quotations for music hall shares are as follow:—Alhambra 1⅛, Empire (15s. paid) 1⅜, Empire (10s. paid) 1½, London Pavilion (5) 2⅜, London Pavilion Pref. (5) 5½, Metropolitan ⅜, Moss' Empires (5) 4, Oxford (5) 7, Palace Theatres (9s. paid) 15-16, Tivoli, New (5) 6¼.

"FLAT 13."

By Arthur Law-Raynor and George Bellamy. Produced at the Camden Hippodrome, on Monday, June 27.

Ralph Hersee ..... Mr. Ernest Leicester
Mary ..... Miss Ruth Maitland
Commissionaire ..... Mr. Arthur G. Leigh
Tavener ..... Mr. R. Van Reuney
Maid ..... Miss Muriel Johnston
Butler ..... Mr. F. Chantler

This sketch is aptly described as of the Grand Guignol type, and the authors have without a doubt written a little play which is intensely dramatic. A shot is heard just as the curtain rises, which discloses Ralph Hersee covering up the body of one Tavener, whom he has shot during a quarrel. The commissionaire and butler come into the flat to see what is the matter, but Ralph puts them off with a plausible explanation. Ralph then prepares to make good his escape, and at that moment Mary, his wife, who had divorced him some years before, enters, having mistaken the number in the flat to which she was going. A big scene follows this dramatic appearance when she discovers her former husband's victim lying prone. After a violent scene she is allowed by him to go away. Ralph then sees the muddle he has got himself into, and poisons himself, only to find just before his death that Tavener was not killed, the bullet having lodged in his cigarette case, and that he is slowly recovering from a dead faint. As Tavener slowly raises himself Ralph falls dead.

It can be easily seen that here is a story of the most thrilling nature, and it is capitally acted by a first-class company, with Mr. Ernest Leicester at the head. Mr. Leicester played magnificently, and always without exaggeration. He had a sure grip throughout, and carried the whole through in a most finished manner. Miss Ruth Maitland likewise acted in a most dramatic fashion as Mary, and she and Mr. Leicester were excellent throughout. Mr. Arthur G. Leigh put in much good work as the commissionaire, and the other parts were admirably played. The sketch made an immediate success, and congratulations are due to the authors, while a word is due for the general production, which is on a most elaborate scale.

The Darlington Hippodrome is closed for five weeks for redecorations.

Mr. Malcolm Spurgin, who went to Worthing with Mr. C. Adolf Seebold in the autumn of 1904, having been previously associated with him at Southend for several years, has just undertaken a fresh set of duties at the Theatre Royal, Worthing. Hitherto he has acted as stage manager and electrician, but in view of the fact that Mr. Seebold will be busily occupied for the present in developing his Kursaal scheme on the Marine-parade, Mr. Spurgin has been appointed assistant manager of the theatre, and assumes control of the box-office. The duties of electrician will now be fulfilled by Mr. Jarrott, who has been with Mr. Spurgin for the past two years.

"REPARATION."

John Ronald ..... Mr. Chas. Bruce Winstey
Mary Ronald ..... Miss Fyfe Alexander
A Convict ..... Mr. Harry Abbas

The above sketch is one of considerable interest, relating, as it does, to home life. It is a tale of the eternal trio—the wife, the husband, and the other man. As the story opens we see John Ronald seated at his desk, hard at work, although the hour is late. The day is one of special importance to his wife, and at her request he ceases from his labours and begs of her to tell him the secret of her past, which appears to be a constant source of worry to her. However, upon this occasion she particularly wishes to place her troubles aside, and asks her husband to defer this none too pleasant task until the morrow. He complies with her wishes.

In her absence he is disturbed by a sudden crashing of glass, and finds that a convict has forcibly entered his house to evade the clutches of the law. The escaped criminal, who pleads for mercy, tells a bitter story of the past. Once he took pity on a poor girl singing in the streets, and finally married her, although she cared nothing for him. After this trouble overwhelmed him, and heartfelt worry made the way easy to crime. Inwardly feeling that his wife cared nothing for him, but showed willingness to tie the marriage-knot out of sheer gratitude for his kindly action, he had let her believe him dead. Touched by this pathetic story, John Ronald determines to do what he can to assist the fugitive to escape. Whilst seeking in another room a fresh suit of clothes for him the wife enters, and, to her dismay, finds that the convict is no other than her first husband—apparently returned from the dead. He craves her forgiveness, and in the end frees the woman from an unwelcome bond by shooting himself.

The piece is exceedingly well put on, and a most perfect interpretation is secured. Mr. Chas. Bruce Winstey capably undertakes the rôle of John Ronald; whilst Miss Fyfe Alexander plays with skill as the wife, Mary Ronald. Much praise is due to Mr. Harry Abbas for his powerful portrayal of the convict.

Princess Baratoff, whose singing at the London Hippodrome will be well remembered, has been the victim of a singular error. She was resting in her flat in the Avenue Victor Hugo when three strange men entered unannounced. They were bailiffs, and they had come to seize the princess's goods at the request of a dressmaker in the Rue Royale. She was unaware of the existence of the dressmaker in question, and naturally protested against this unjustifiable intrusion; but the bailiffs were inexorable. The Princess sought the assistance of the law, and when she and the dressmaker appeared in Court both soon realised that an error in identity had been made. The President lost no time in ridding the Princess of the bailiffs.

"ALCIS."

Corresus ..... Mr. Richard Norton
Butus ..... Mr. Sydney Kearns
Slave ..... Mr. Max Martini
Cophas ..... Master Bert Clerc
Alcis ..... Miss Elise Craven

This trifle is evidently arranged for the purpose of affording that wonderfuly clever little dancer, Elise Craven, an opportunity to display her powers. Apart from this, however, it is a pretty scena, with a short, touching story. When the curtain rises an artistic and picturesque view of a vineyard, situated near Athens, is shown, with a strolling player, named Butus, and his two pupils, Cophas and Alcis, asleep by the wayside awaiting the dawn. The first peep of the sun awakens Butus, who is apparently bound for Athens in order to reap a monetary return for the dancing of the little ones. Rousing the children, he threateningly admonishes Cophas for his bad dancing, promising him a few strokes of a whip he carries should he not do better. During the temporary absence of Butus the children have a rehearsal, Alcis endeavouring to improve her companion's style, and here the remarkable little dancer Elise Craven has an opportunity of showing her talents to a great extent. At this point Corresus, a high priest of Minerva, appears in the guise of a beggar, and to him the children offer food. Butus, on returning, attempts to thrash Cophas for his backwardness, whereupon Corresus interferes, and terrifies Butus by revealing his identity. The curtain comes down on Butus being ordered to take the road to the north, while the priest and the children go towards Athens. The audience on Monday evening were charmed with the little sketch, the whole of the characters filling their parts in praiseworthy manner. In addition to Elise Craven, some smart dances, arranged by Miss Elise Clerc, were performed by Master Bert Clerc and Mr. Max Martini. The mounting was elaborate, and wherever produced Alcis should prove very acceptable.

Jennie Alexander, the clever child mimic, is this week on a return visit to the Grand, Hanley. She has just finished a most successful four months' London engagement, and returns to town on Aug. 1 to play her sixth date at the Holborn Empire.

Immediately the result of the Jeffries-Johnson contest comes to hand on Monday night a number of the provincial music halls will send up red rockets if Jeffries wins and green ones for Johnson's victory.

Mr. Ben de Frece, the resident-manager of the Hippodrome, Colchester, was the recipient on June 23 of a handsome diamond buckle ring as a birthday gift from the staff and a few intimate personal frends, who thus united in their efforts to give tangible effect to the esteem in which they hold him.

"TO-MORROW'S DAWN."

Capt. the Hon. Jack Granby ..... Mr. John Manners
Capt. Francis Vivian ..... Mr. Frank Dale
Tony Fowler ..... Mr. Eric Norman
Natalie ..... Miss Dora Eastlake
Dorian, Earl of Norton ..... Mr. Cecil Gray

After the success of The Last Straw on the London music halls, one waited with interest for the curtain to rise on Mr. Cecil Gray's newest production, To-Morrow's Dawn. Monday last, however, saw its successful launching, and the many critics who stated that Mr. Gray would find it difficult to "go one better" than The Last Straw have been compelled to admit that in To-Morrow's Dawn he has found a play that leaves The Last Straw far in the background.

Dorian, Earl of Norton, returning to his ancestral hall, Norton Castle, with his newly-made bride, is welcomed by his younger brother, Captain the Hon. Jack Granby, and a number of fellow officers and civilian guests. Dorian, it appears, had met the fair Natalie abroad, and made her his Countess, giving her all the love of his strong and noble nature. But the tragic note is struck with startling suddenness when the younger brother recognises in his sister-in-law a woman with a past—a woman whose sinister reputation is well known to all but the infatuated husband.

The Countess, taking advantage of the admiration of one of Jack's fellow officers, Captain Vivian, persuades him to spread the report to the assembled guests that Jack is in love with her, and this he does in a strong scene—clinching the lie by stating that he has seen them in each other's arms—has seen them even kissing each other. These statements are overheard by the Earl, who promptly knocks the traducer down, and sending for Jack asks for and accepts his word of honour that he has not betrayed him. The Countess, finding her confederate has failed to convince her husband, now takes the matter in hand herself. While telling her husband's brother that she loves him, she hears the Earl approaching, and quickly decides on a master stroke of duplicity. As the Earl appears, she clasps his brother in her arms and rapturously kisses him.

The outraged Earl, treating his brother's denials with contempt, denounces the seemingly guilty pair, and in a powerful scene goads his brother into stating what he meant never to reveal. In reply to Dorian's reproaches Jack tells him the true character of the Countess, and is forced into stating that she had been notorious throughout the regiment when quartered in India, and that the pure angel of Dorian's choice had previously been his younger brother's mistress. The Earl, mad with passion, strikes his brother to the ground, and at the same moment a fierce and devilish laugh from the Countess breaks upon the silence which follows the Earl's rash blow, and then the woman's real character and purpose is made known to the unhappy Dorian. Her father, she declares—one Borachi, an Indian seditionist—was sent to the gallows by Dorian's father for killing one of England's famous Indian officials, and since that day she has devoted her life to wiping out the race of the Granbys.

At this moment her revenge is complete, and she leaves Dorian standing over Jack's body, and her triumphant and half hysterical laugh rings through the corridors of the castle. Vainly calling on his brother to come back to life, the noble mind begins to fail, and Dorian, fifth Earl of Norton, his brain snapping under the cruel strain, becomes a raving lunatic.

The second scene shows the scheming woman, with her accomplice, Captain Vivian, reigning in Norton Castle. Jack, recovered from the awful blow and subsequent brain concussion, has just returned from a fruitless search for his brother. The Earl supposed by the guests to be travelling abroad, is in reality chained in a dungeon in the old castle, access to which can only be found through a secret panel in the hall. Dosed with brandy by his faithless wife and her paramour—who hourly expect his death—Dorian with a madman's ingenuity and cunning, contrives to break his chains and suddenly appears, through the secret panel, and stands in his rags, a raving maniac, in the midst of the assembled guests. After a furious struggle he is forced back into his prison, and the Countess begs her startled friends to respect the family secret, and keep from the world the awful fact that the Earl of Norton is a hopeless madman.

The guests depart, the Countess retires to her room, again the secret panel flies open, and Dorian is loose upon his work of vengeance. The unhinged mind has remembered the spring of the panel, and the wretched madman wanders round the great hall. The Countess enters alone, and, seeing her, the memory of his wrongs fills the empty vessels of the brain, and with one wild leap from the balcony Dorian grips the woman by the throat. For some minutes nothing can be heard but the mad yells of the avenger and the despairing shrieks of the doomed Countess. At last all is over—Dorian's last remaining strength has been exhausted in the struggle; he is dying. At this moment Jack's voice is heard, sadly singing a favourite song of their childhood, and the younger brother enters to find the faithless woman dead, and Dorian kneeling by her. He calls Dorian by name, and the mad soul hears, as he thinks, his brother calling from the spirit world and answers him. Then with a prayer for forgiveness and mercy on his lips the poor, tired soul takes its flight, and Dorian, fifth Earl of Norton, falls lifeless beside the woman who had wrecked his life. Mr. John Manners was good as Captain the Hon. Jack Granby; Mr. Frank Dale was effective as Captain Francis Vivian; Mr. Eric Norman did excellent work as Tony Fowler; Miss Dora Eastlake was seen to advantage as Natalie; and Mr. Cecil Gray was really powerful as Dorian, Earl of Norton.

Miss Cissie Thompson returns to town again next week, to open at the Syndicate Halls, having just completed a highly successful provincial tour with Moss and Stoll. In answer to numerous inquiries, Miss Thompson wishes it to be known that her latest successful songs, "There's danger on the line" and "My pals are at home," are her sole property. Anyone singing them without her permission will be proceeded against.

Mr. Sydney Chaplin, one of Mr. Fred Karno's principal comedians, now resting in Switzerland, has recently met with a thrilling adventure and a narrow escape from death. When mountain climbing, making his way from Caux to Les Avants, he came across notices posted up forbidding anyone to go farther under penalty of a heavy fine owing to the dangerous blasting operations that were taking place. But as there were no other paths leading to his destination, and not relishing the idea of turning back, he decided to go on and risk it.

He had just reached the pass that runs under Les Dents de Jaman when he was startled by a terrific explosion some distance up the mountain. Down came a perfect avalanche of huge boulders of rock, carrying everything before it. He crouched close up to the mountain side, expecting death instantly; but though the stones shattered all round him he escaped with nothing more serious than a badly cut hand and a bruised shoulder. About a month ago the body of a man was found badly mangled close to the place where Mr. Chaplin's accident occurred.

Children's Carnival at Consett.
THE children had special attention at the Consett Skating Rink on Monday, when a fancy dress carnival was held for their behalf, and to which spectators were admitted at a nominal charge. This was followed by a grand summer dress carnival on Wednesday. The Consett Military Band will be in attendance at the closing ball to be held at the Rink on Monday. The expert demonstrations of plain and fancy skating by Professor Jas. Patterson Munro, I.P.R.S.A., have decided attractions. In roller skating as in everything else, there is always something to learn, and those who have had the advantage of this teacher's training are enabled to add to the sources of their enjoyment considerably.

Olympia, Cardiff.
THE attendances at the Olympia Skating Rink, in Queen-street, Cardiff, have been well maintained. The band continues to provide irresistible two-steps, waltzes, and marches, which, combined with the splendid quality of the skates and the well-nigh perfect nature of the rink, produce plenty of swing and enjoyment.

Novel Competition at Scarborough.
VISITORS are finding their way to the Grand Rink, Scarborough, in large numbers, and appreciation is being expressed on every hand of the fine skating surface, and the efforts of the management to ensure every comfort. A huge attraction has been arranged for Thursday, July 7, when an advertisement carnival will be held. The coupon competition closed on June 30, and the piano to be given to the persons possessing the largest number of coupons will be presented at the carnival.

West Stanley Skating Rink.

Davidson at Reading.
PROFESSOR JOHN F. DAVIDSON has been specially engaged to give his exhibition display of trick and acrobatic skating at the Central Skating Rink, Reading, this week. His clever and difficult performance has been greatly admired.

Clacton's Confetti Carnival.
ON Wednesday the season of the indoor rink at the Clacton-on-Sea Skating-rink and Palace was terminated with a carnival, confetti fête, and dance, and was attended by a large number of spectators and skaters. Handsome prizes were presented for the two best costumes (ladies) and two best costumes (gentlemen). On Thursday the inauguration of the magnificent new open-air rink took place. A large number of skaters were on the rink, and expressed delight with it. A good military band was in attendance, and the proceedings were watched by a crowd of spectators. The extensive grounds of the Palace have been remodelled and beautified. The rink is surrounded by charming walks. Numerous refreshment rooms have been provided, and from these a good view of the skating can be commanded. The rink is within a few yards of the North Sea, which will render rinking at Clacton an extremely healthy pastime. The grounds are illuminated with fairy lamps, and the view of the rink at night is charming. Mr. H. R. D. Cooper is the managing-director, Mr. T. Butt combining the duties of general-manager and secretary.

Prof. Wingard at Portland Rink.
THERE was a crowded house at the Palace and Rink, Portland, on Saturday night last, when Professor Wingard, the Royal Illusionist, was specially engaged. His clever entertainment was keenly enjoyed by all present, and voted quite one of the best that had ever visited Portland.

A ONCE FAMOUS GYMNAST.

Once universally famed as a tight-rope walker and trapeze artist, Mme. Senyeah, who in the days of her prosperity was known as "Empress of the Air," has died in Lambeth Infirmary, the shadow of poverty having darkened her last years. It was her boast that she had performed before every crowned head in Europe, including Queen Victoria and King Edward and Queen Alexandra, when Prince and Princess of Wales. Unfortunately, she fell on bad times, and in late years has been living in a single room in Dawlish-street, Kennington. A month ago she fell ill with brain trouble, and was removed on an ambulance to the Infirmary. She was then in a dying condition, but lingered until Thursday, the 23rd ult., when she passed away. With her were Mrs. Lawrence and her daughter, Miss Vesta Victoria, who, living in Stockwell, have interested themselves in her case, and have brightened the last eighteen months of her life. Nothing was known at the Infirmary of the deceased woman's antecedents, and in the books she was described as "Phœbe Hall, suffering from cerebral thrombosis." To none of the nurses did she speak of her career.

Mrs. Lawrence states that when Mme. Senyeah found she was no longer wanted as a trapeze artist she took up the training of dogs, and went on the music-hall stage, but finally she was forced to get her living by performing in the streets, and often she did not take more than twopence or threepence a day. Mrs. Lawrence, continuing, said, "It was our greengrocer who found her in his stable nearly frozen to death the winter before last. He took her and put her in front of the fire, and brought her round. She got through the winter somehow. About twelve months ago she came to my daughter, Miss Vesta Victoria, and told her her sad tale. My daughter said you need not cry and worry any more. I will see that you don't want again. Since then my daughter has paid the rent of the room and the stable where she kept her four dogs, which were passionately devoted to her. Another lady in Clapham-road found her food."

The deceased artist's maiden name was Phœbe Frost, and she and her sister Zephyr Frost were the daughters of Mme. Antonio, wife of Dan Harvey, clown, and she married a Mr. Haynes, a well-known acrobat, her professional title being that surname read backwards. In our advertisements of the London Pavilion in 1868 her name was printed Senyah, and in The Era Almanack of the same year we find in the list of gymnasts and acrobats of that period the names of Mr. and Mrs. Senyah (coupled).

The funeral, the entire expense of which was borne by Mrs. Lawrence, took place on Tuesday, from the premises of Mr. W. R. Dunkley, professional undertaker, of 88, Westminster Bridge-road, S.E., the interment being in Lambeth Cemetery, Tooting. The mourners in the first carriage were Mrs. Irene Lawrence (mother of Miss Vesta Victoria), with deceased's favourite dog Pigeon, Mrs. Webb, of Clapham, and Nurse Jessop. In the second carriage were Miss Mary Webb and Master George Webb (of Clapham), Mrs. Whitman, and Miss Strickland. The wreaths came from Mrs. Lawrence, Mrs. Webb, her friend Jackie Webb, the little boy who used to feed her dogs, Tommie Webb, Mr. and Mrs. Kingdons (her greengrocer friends), Mr. and Mrs. Whitman, Mrs. Rowlands, and Nurse Jessop.

LONDON PRODUCERS.

A CHAT WITH FRANK PARKER.

The fact that Mr. Frank Parker has just terminated a 10½ years' contract with the Moss Empires at the London Hippodrome is an excellent reason for giving a brief résumé of a busy career. "I began," said Mr. Parker, "in the refreshment department at the Adelphi Theatre under my uncle, John Parker, in 1878. For five years I acted as gas-boy in the same house, 'behind,' first under Chatterton, then under Mr. Clark, and later under the Gattis. The pieces that were then presented? Let me see. Roughly, I can remember The Golden Plough, by Paul Merritt; The Carl Rosa Co., in The Merry Wives of Windsor, by Otto Nicolai; The Golden Cross and The Marriage of Figaro; and, in the dramatic season the same year—1878—Proof; or a Celebrated Case. At different times the part of Pierre was played by Herr Bandmann, Hermann Vezin, and Henry Neville, with Arthur Stirling as Lazare. Although my position was humble, I took the keenest interest in every play that was produced. The Crimson Cross followed Proof, then Ninon, Forbidden Fruit, revivals of Peep o' Day, The Shaughraun, Arrah-na-Pogue, and the production of The O'Dowd. In the three last-named the great Dion Boucicault, the father of stage-managers, appeared, and it was a lesson to see him work. I left the Adelphi in 1880, and went to Drury Lane under Augustus Harris for The World, and then for Mother Goose. I was promoted to the position of prompter. Here were produced a number of German plays in 1881, and Youth; next, a pantomime of Robinson Crusoe, with Fannie Leslie, Miss Amalia, Arthur Roberts, James Fawn, Harry Nicholls, Harry Jackson, and Fred Storey, the production being an enormous success."

[Photo by Campbell Gray, Ltd.
MR. FRANK PARKER.

Mr. Parker remained at the Lane, working upwards all the time, during the runs of Pluck, Queen Elizabeth, with Madame Ristori, German opera, and more British dramas, A Sailor and His Lass, Freedom, Youth, Human Nature, A Run of Luck, and, indeed, all the plays with which Drury Lane was identified under the rule of Sir Augustus Harris, as well as the operas, English, German, and Italian. Mr. Frank Parker was studying in a good school, and, after leaving the National Theatre, he went to the Gaiety, for Monte Cristo, in 1886, as assistant stage-manager to Charles Harris. Here he was associated with the production also of Esmeralda, Frankenstein, Ruy Blas, and Cinder-Ellen-up-too-late, the last piece in which poor Fred Leslie and Nellie Farren appeared.

"Those pieces cover a number of years, as you know," added Mr. Parker. "Then I went to the Shaftesbury Theatre in 1893, where my first production, Morocco Bound, was a splendid success, and had a long run. I migrated to the Trafalgar in March, 1894, to do Go Bang, by Adrian Ross and Osmond Carr, and when that was in full swing I crossed over to the Avenue for Dandy Dick Whittington, in which Miss May Yohe sustained the chief part. Then came The French Maid at Terry's and the Vaudeville, and at the latter house Her Royal Highness in September, 1898. In the meantime and at various periods I may state that I filled up my spare moments and days and weeks by producing pantomimes at Brixton and Brighton—at the former place Cinderella, Robinson Crusoe, and Aladdin, and at the latter Whittington and His Cat.

"Then came my engagement by Mr. Moss, now Sir Edward, as producer for the London Hippodrome, which he was then opening (1900). Among the many successes at that house I might mention Siberia, which was played twice a day for six months, and was again revived for four months. Cinderella played 181 performances—a world's record for pantomime—Tally Ho scored another six months' run, and amongst other hits were Aladdin, The Bandits (288 performances), Dick Whittington, The Redskins (239 performances and revival), The Golden Princess, Butterflies in Fairyland, Among the Stars, The Flood (274 performances), The Earthquake, The Avalanche, Sands o' Dee, and The Motor Chase.

"I have several offers in view," added Mr. Parker in answer to an inquiry as to the future. "Amongst the most tempting are one for America and two for Australia." Mr. Parker is devoted to his work, and, having gone through pretty well every department in the profession, knows exactly what to do, when to do it, and how to do it.

MR. HARRY RICKARDS has arrived in London in search of fresh attractions for his many Australian ventures. He is accompanied by his wife, daughter, and secretary.

THE Kursaal Gardens, Worthing, of which the proprietor and manager is Mr. C. Adolf Seebold, were opened this week by the popular lessee of the Theatre Royal, and it is admitted that this enterprising gentleman has supplied a long-felt want in this delightful seaside resort. The gardens are only part of a huge scheme which will provide for Worthing a huge hall capable of holding some 3,000 people. The Lawns are situated in a sheltered position on the Marine-parade, and make a pleasant retreat from the gusty weather that may be prevalent on the front. Among the chief attractions of the Lawns are the admirably laid-out flower beds, and at the witching hour of night the gardens are brilliant with electrical illuminations. During the week the many visitors to the gardens by the sea have been able to listen to the Comedy Comets, who have already established themselves warm favourites. The company includes Mr. Matt Melrose, Mr. Harry Taylor, Mr. Ernest Stanley, Mr. Markwell, and Miss Lalla Melrose and Miss Nina May. Three performances are being given daily.

"THE SUMMING-UP."

The Judge .....MR. ARNOLD BELL
The Woman .....MISS FRANCES CAMPBELL
Judge's Secretary .....MR. F. C. ROBSON

The scene opens in the Judge's chambers, with the secretary at the telephone. The Judge enters, stating that he has had a hard, racking day. He has everything he schemed for—fame, position, everything, but the love of a woman.

The secretary enters, and explains that a woman who has tramped a long way, and waited many weary hours, thought that the Judge might see her. The Judge says he will see her.

Among the prisoners there is a man charged with embezzlement from a wealthy firm of merchants. She tells the Judge he must put the case back. The Judge informs her that he cannot, and if the man has stolen he must take the consequences. The woman replies that for a miserable pittance he had to pay all accounts, handle hundreds of pounds weekly, and he gave way to a sudden temptation. His heart listened to the piteous cry of a dying child, who wanted to see the green fields and blue sky once more. Their home was all gone in getting what the doctor ordered, and he applied to his employers, and their answer was that if not satisfied he could get work elsewhere. He stole, and hurried home only to find the boy had passed away.

The Judge eventually discovers that the boy is his own child, and that the woman, who pleads so pitifully is she whom he wronged many years ago, and that her husband, for whom she is pleading, is he who, though he knew her story, married her to give his—the Judge's—child a name.

"God bless him," says the Judge; but he can only do his duty, that which the law expects and demands of him. As she does not love this man, why does she want him back? To which she responds that when she married she told her husband she did not love him, but his devotion to her and her child had taught her almost to worship him, and if any sacrifice of hers could save him she would willingly consent to it.

The Judge begs her to come back to him. He will make it worth the man's while to go out of her life. She refuses, and the Judge, seeing his mistake, begs her forgiveness. She scorns him and tells him that one day a Judge more just, more merciful than he will "sum up," and as he has dealt with others here so will he be dealt with there.

As the Judge Mr. Arnold Bell acted with great force, and showed great earnestness. Miss Frances Campbell as the woman was a strikingly pathetic and powerful figure. The Judge's Secretary is admirably enacted by Mr. F. C. Robson, who does everything required of him in a most satisfactory manner. We congratulate artists and author on a charming little play.

A One-Act Sketch, Produced at the Grand Theatre, Halifax, June 29.

On the rising of the curtain Max Tracey is lamenting the possibility of the failure of his wife to induce his twin brother Hubert to give up a document he (Max) has forged. After committing the forgery Max becomes afraid of the result of his crime. Before the marriage of Max and Lena Hubert had been the choice of Lena; but Max, by means of lies and slander, managed to persuade Lena to marry him. He has now tired of his wife, and wishes to get rid of her. Lena returns without the cheque. Max confesses the forgery to Lena, and tells her he must flée the country. Lena, under the impression that Max intends to take her with him, readily agrees. Max refuses to take her. Lena confesses to Max that his brother Hubert made violent love to her, and overwhelmed her with kisses. In her frenzy she took up a dagger from the table and stabbed Hubert, and believes him dead. She searched the pockets of Hubert, but could not find the cheque, only a bundle of bank notes, which she hands to Max. Max now has the wherewithal to quit the country. He promises to take Lena, and sends her to her room to get ready. Max writes a letter to Lena informing her that she is not his wife, as at the time of his supposed marriage he had a wife living. Max, under the pretence of calling a cat, leaves the house never to return. Lena re-enters the room, finds the letter, and on learning its contents and believing herself a murderess, goes mad. In her madness she sees herself condemned to death, and in her eagerness to escape the hangman poisons herself. As she lay helpless Hubert enters to tell her what a brute he was, and that the stabs were only flesh wounds. Lena points out the letter to Hubert. Hubert tells her she is now free to marry him. In her dying moments she confesses her love for Hubert, and thus make reparation for the wrong she did him in marrying Max.

The story is concisely told, and the dialogue is well written. Though bordering on the tragic side, the sketch is a clever piece of work and reflects great credit on the author, Captain Gerald Gambier. Mr. Gilson Brooks played the dual rôles of Max and Hubert, and acquitted himself very well. The trying part of Lena was undertaken, and splendidly played, by a well-known Halifax young lady, who has achieved considerable success as an amateur actress and a Shakespearean student.

ALTHOUGH the weather was not ideal for outdoor enjoyment, those who took part in the seventh annual picnic of the staff and friends of the Alexandra Theatre, Birmingham, on Sunday last had a very pleasant experience. The party, of about ninety ladies and gentlemen, headed by Mr. Lester Collingwood, the genial proprietor of the theatre, included Mr. E. Foster (Grand Theatre), Mr. A. W. Matcham (Empire Theatre), Mr. Albert Bushell (Gaiety Theatre), Messrs. Barrett and Knowles, Mr. Cull Pitt, Miss Ray Ford, Mr. McManus (Deputy Chief Constable of Birmingham), and other Birmingham friends.

THE programme for the journey was well arranged, the party travelling by train to Stratford-on-Avon, and from thence by coaches to Bidford. A capital dinner was served at the White Lion Hotel, Bidford, and subsequently several toasts were honoured.

MR. LESTER COLLINGWOOD proposed "Our Friends, which was responded to by Mr. Matcham. The health of "The Guv'nor" was also toasted with enthusiasm. During the afternoon an enjoyable programme of sports events was gone through, the winners being:—100yds. scratch race.—1, Miss Knott; 2, Miss Ray Ford. Egg and spoon race.—1, Miss Knott; 2, Miss Powell. Hop, skip, and jump (gentlemen).—1, B. Hicken. 100yds. scratch race (gentlemen).—1, Mr. Wilkes; 2, Mr. Harrison. Prizes were awarded to the successful competitors, being provided by friends included in the party, and distributed by Mr. Collingwood. The fancy sock competition, which appears to be quite a recognised feature of the annual outing, was won easily by Mr. James Rowlands, of the Market Hotel, Birmingham.

THE pretty walks in the neighbourhood were appreciated by many members of the party, and boating was also a popular pastime. Tea was served at the White Lion Hotel, after which the trippers climbed again into the coaches and thoroughly enjoyed the return drive to Stratford in the evening. Birmingham was reached about 10 p.m., after a most successful day's outing.

THE TERRIERS' ASSOCIATION.

One of the best known societies connected with the variety profession, the Terriers' Association, continues to flourish amazingly, and its members are to be congratulated upon an exceptionally prosperous season, and the soundness of the financial position. During the past eighteen months the whole of the work of the Association has been thoroughly reorganised. The Sunday meetings, too, have developed from a "Free and Easy" into a gathering on Masonic lines, with all the glory of regalia, robes, &c. New and up-to-date methods have been introduced, and the benefit society work of the Association is carried out under the Registered Friendly Societies Act. Artists are beginning to realise that it is to their advantage to join the Association, and applications for membership are numerous.

The Association was formed on May 25, 1890, by a few music hall artists, amongst whom was the late Mr. Joe Lawrence, known as Terrier No. 1. Their aim was to promote good fellowship and society amongst its members, to assist one another socially, professionally, or financially, to extend the hand of friendship in prosperity or adversity. The brotherhood so ably conceived, has, in its eighteen years of existence, developed into an Association of world-wide fame and importance.

Should a member meet with misfortune anywhere, he has only to communicate with the Association and he is immediately overwhelmed with offers of assistance, and any necessary financial aid is rendered forthwith. If he is taken ill, he has but to call in the nearest doctor, and he need have no anxiety whatever regarding the cost. The Association pays all his medical expenses, and also provides him with adequate sick pay, whilst any Terrier who happens to be in the neighbourhood will hasten to his bedside to cheer him up. Should he die, his wife or nearest relative, &c., will receive £20. On the death of his wife, he receives £5 towards the expenses.

If a Terrier is in urgent need of a loan for any reasonable purpose, it is granted at once, and he can repay it at his convenience, and no interest whatsoever is charged. The bond of sympathy that unites the brotherhood is so strongly manifested that no Terrier ever calls for assistance without a universal desire on the part of the other members to render any necessary aid. Should a member require legal advice, the services of the hon. solicitor are at his disposal. In case of loss of properties by fire, the Association has made arrangements whereby he will receive compensation.

Any person over the age of eighteen and under forty-five years, who in the opinion of the committee is a legitimate performer, actually earning his livelihood on the music hall or variety stage, or in a circus, or other building properly conducted as a place of entertainment, is eligible as an active member. Anyone either directly or indirectly connected with, or interested in the profession is eligible as an honorary member. The entrance fee is £2 2s., and the weekly subscription 1s. Honorary members pay an entrance fee of £1 1s., and a yearly subscription of 10s. 6d.

The annual dinner and ball is a great event of the year, and a feature is also made of occasional "Pig's Head Banquets." During the winter months ladies' concerts are held upon the first Sunday in the month, and are invariably crowded. A ceremonial meeting of the Association is held every Sunday night at the Three Stags Hotel, Kennington-road. Officers are elected every month for various positions, and there is always keen competition for the different posts.

The president of the Association, Terrier H. H. Griff, the jesting juggler, has recently returned from a tour in America, and the event was made the occasion for a "Welcome Home" banquet, which was a very enjoyable function.

Mr. Arthur Were, the energetic and popular secretary, is an accountant by profession, and was educated at Dulwich College. After three years in commercial offices, he obtained an appointment upon the secretarial staff of the People's Palace for East London, at the time of its opening in 1887. He gained considerable experience in the organisation of workmen's and apprentices' exhibitions, fêtes, dog, cat, bird, and numerous other shows, and entertainments of all kinds. During his five years on the staff at the Palace, he received two public testimonials, and two silver and one bronze medals, in recognition of his labours. He organised the Garrick Dramatic Company (an ambitious band of theatrical students), and at their performances of well-known plays, on behalf of various charities, at the principal town and public halls in the East End, acquired a reputation of being a first-class character actor. In later years he has devoted his spare time to running "The Petite Comedietta Company," which he founded in order to provide an entertainment suitable for institutes, barracks, clubs, piers, &c. He has written and successfully produced, for this combination, some twenty comedy and dramatic sketches, all the songs and music being from his pen. His entertainment, given in conjunction with Miss Violet Murray (the talented elocutionist) and others, included many original comedy skits, dramatic scena, songs, and quick-change studies from plays. On various occasions he has joined his old friend Mr. Henry Bedford, and played a round of parts in that well-known actor's repertoire company. Mr. Were has also appeared at various halls in dramatic sketches.

An enthusiastic first-nighter, Mr. Were is president of the Gallery First Nighters Club, of which he is one of the founders, and an old member of the O.P. and Playgoers' Clubs. At various music hall banquets this year he has gained a reputation for delivering witty speeches, although he asserts that he has a morbid disposition which he attributes to his studies in astronomy. His business experience and general knowledge of theatrical and vaudeville affairs have been of great service to the Terriers.

THE TERRIERS' OUTING.

The annual river outing of the Terriers' Association took place on Sunday last in glorious weather, and was a most successful function. Eighty Terriers and their friends assembled at Waterloo station at 9.30 a.m. Specially reserved saloon carriages were provided for the journey to Windsor and ample refreshments supplied. Upon arrival at the castle town, the company embarked upon the saloon steam launch, The King, a very commodious boat. After the "goods" had been safely stowed aboard, and Signor Uccelli's chef and staff ensconced in the pantry, "we parted from the shore." Terriers Walter Norman and Charles Cornish speedily erected a miniature "Stag's" bar, and were kept busy all the day dispensing cocktails and other beverages, and did so with a skill that aroused the envy of Terrier Salter.

The company present included Alec. Alexander, A. Alexander, jun., J. Abrahams, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Barnard, E. Braybrooke, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Brandow, Ted E. Box, Mrs. Barnes, Mr. Bremner, Charles Chapman, Chas. Cornish, George Cooper, Mr. and Mrs. Crook, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Dunkley, Miss Radena Dey, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Gait, Mr. and Mrs. George, Chas. F. Gage, George Harris, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hooper, Mr. A. Hempel, A. W. Hanwell, Miss N. Horman, Beresford Hope, L. Josephs, Miss Elsa Joel, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kohler, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Kloof, Fred Larola, J. Mitchell Langley, Mr. and Mrs. Pete Murray, Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Mervyn, Pete Moriggia, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Maisner, M. Morris, Bert Marsden, Percy Madden, Miss E. Morrison, Miss Marlow, Walter Norman, Miss Marie Newholme, Miss Ada Ohlson, Mr. and Mrs. Pritchard, Mr. and Mrs. A. Plumbe, Ernest Powell, Mrs. Pierce, Mme. Rose, Sammy Shields, George Shirley, Captain A. Smith, Percy Smith, H. Stewart, C. Douglas Stuart, S. N. Salter, Mr. and Mrs. Trim, Mr. and Mrs. Wagstaffe, Miss D. Wagstaff, Miss M. Wagstaff, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Woodger, Mr. Wood, and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Were.

Amongst the exciting incidents of the voyage may be chronicled the wreck of a skiff, with the rescue of its unfortunate occupants; the comedy duologue between Bernard Mervyn and a lock-keeper; and the sight of three ancient anglers (in a punt), whose woe-begone appearance aroused universal merriment, and caused the comedians of the party to join lustily in the "Three blind mice." An excellent luncheon was served by Signor Uccelli, of the Hôtel Boulogne.

After tea, upon the return journey, the party landed at Monkey Island, for the purpose of holding sports, for which some valuable prizes had been given by Terriers W. R. Dunkley, Ted E. Box, F. Larola, Syd Walker, and S. N. Salter. The organisation of the sports was in the hands of Terrier Ben Woodger, chairman of the Sports Committee, and valuable assistance was rendered by Terriers Ted E. Box and W. R. Dunkley in carrying out as many events as was possible in the short time at their disposal. Terriers Harry Barnard and Percy Madden acted as judges.

The following races, &c., were decided:—50yds. race (ladies').—Miss N. Horman, 1; Mrs. Russell Brandow, 2. 100yds. race (Terriers only).—F. Larola, 1; Ernest Powell, 2; Ben Woodger, 3. 200yds. race (visitors').—L. Josephs, 1; G. Shirley, 2. 75yds. race (ladies').—Miss Radena Dey, 1; Mrs. Arthur Were, 2. Hat trimming contest.—Pete Moriggia, 1; Geo. Cooper, 2. Threading a needle.—Mrs. Ben Woodger, 1; Mrs. C. W. Kloof, 2. Mrs. F. A. Hooper presented the prizes to the blushing recipients.

The musical arrangements for the outing were ably carried out by Terrier Ernest Powell, and most of the artists on board contributed to the programme. Great credit is due to the stewards, Terriers W. R. Dunkley, Russell Brandow, Beresford Hope, Bert Marsden, Ben Woodger, S. N. Salter, and Chas. F. Gage, for their assiduous attention to the comfort of the party. The secretary, Arthur Were, was responsible for the general arrangements of the outing, which were carried out to the satisfaction of all. An excellent photograph was taken by Mr. B. F. Hunt, 4, Bolton-road, Windsor, and copies of same (2s. 6d. each) may be ordered of the secretary.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—When I began to write this letter I felt in a fearfully "lecturing" mood, but as I don't think there is much money in that sort of thing, as nobody really likes to be lectured, I will avoid giving way to it any more than I can help. Through your kindness, sir, and that of others, I have made urgent appeal to my brother and sister artists for help in connection with the above-named event. Certainly help has been sent and promised, but very little, considering what might, could, and should be done. This is one of our most important public functions. This is an occasion when we have a splendid opportunity to show our friends (the public) how earnest, energetic, and whole-hearted we can be in the cause of our poorer colleagues. If we do so we infallibly win the public's sympathy and the public's help, which is, after all, the chief object. The point I want to drive home is this—a number of artists give liberally of their time and labour in order to collect funds, and to see that those funds are honestly and carefully distributed as they were given and intended. Is it too much that they should confidently look to such of their brethren as are well "fixed" as to this world's goods, but who have not the same time to spare (or say they haven't), to assist their efforts in every other way they can? I venture to think not. We cannot evade our obvious duties and retain even our own self respect. Of course, my committee and I are thoroughly grateful to those friends who are helping us, but this word of suggestion ought not to be considered out of season by those who have not yet responded. We want some good prizes and donations—small and large ad lib. We have already about fifty-five prizes, and want about twenty more. Now then, boys and girls, don't wait till you get a letter. Write in. Look how well the actors and actresses worked at the Botanical Gardens the other day. High and low were at it. And what a success! As I said before, I am thankful to those who have sent help, and am pleased to add the following names to those already published. They say it is hard to get money out of a lawyer, but, anyhow, I managed to get a nice little five guineas out of our friend Eugene Judge for a prize, and by quite a painless operation, too, my old friend Sandow kindly sent me £3 3s. for another; J. W. Cragg tumbled into my net; he's a very soft case (got a two-page advertisement out of him as well); Mr. A. Jenning, of the Buchanan-street Station Hotel, Glasgow, has sent a guinea prize, in addition to a former contribution. The agents have not held back, as both Mr. Harry Burns and Messrs. G. and F. Peel are prize-givers. Should like to hear from some more—and managers. And finally, for the present, Scotland is well represented by Willie Frame ("Hooch aye!") and Harry Lauder with a guinea each, and Neil Kenyon, the "Islander" (not "Highlander," gentle reader), with five guineas. So you see, sir, we are getting along. Intending competitors should note that entries will not be accepted later than the last post on Saturday, July 9—that's next Saturday—so hurry up!—Yours truly,

CHARLES COBORN.

DECISION ON THE L.C.C. BILL.

Since Tuesday a Select Committee of the House of Commons, presided over by Sir Francis Leyland-Barratt, have been considering in detail that portion of the London County Council (General Powers) Bill which seeks further powers in regard to employment agencies, and in particular to bring theatrical and music hall agencies under their control by having them licensed. On Thursday what promised to be a long inquiry suddenly closed and the preamble of the Bill was declared passed. Opposition came from a body of employment agencies and agents in the county of London, but Mr. Blennerhasset, K.C. (who with Mr. Ram, K.C., represented them) having listened to the chairman's declaration that, if agencies were to be licensed, theatrical and music hall agencies should be included, said that what they would agree to was registration or licensing so long as there was a power of appeal to a Bench of magistrates and if that pointed to a court of quarter sessions. The L.C.C. counsel then consented to the powers of appeal being inscribed in the Bill, and the chairman announced that there should be licensing of agents, coupled with the double power of appeal, and that notice of objection to renewal should be given, otherwise renewal would be granted as a matter of course.

On Tuesday, the Hon. J. D. Fitzgerald, K.C. (with him Mr. Ewan Charteris) opened the case for the L.C.C., remarking that probably the most important question raised was as to employment agencies. The powers at present possessed by the L.C.C. under their General Power Act of 1905 had not been found sufficient to suppress the evils, and it was necessary for the Council to ask for more effective powers. Employment agencies were of many kinds. There were the well-known employment agencies for domestic servants, for governesses, typewriters, and persons of that sort, there were agencies dealing mainly with clerks, waiters, and employees of that kind, there were theatrical and music hall agencies, there were philanthropic agencies, and many others. He admitted that many of those agencies were of the highest class and were carried on without any reproach whatever, and if they had only to deal with such agencies it might probably not be necessary to have any powers at all. But these agencies gave great scope for fraudulent practices and, in some cases, for immoral practices. Such agencies were often dealing with young girls and with persons of both sexes with very little means very anxious to get employment, but often with very little knowledge of the world and very easily deceived. Some of these agencies dealt largely with foreigners, who were attracted over here by advertisements or sent by agents abroad, and who had no or very little knowledge of this country at all. Other agencies made it a portion of their business to find employment for English girls abroad. In some cases they were girls who had never been abroad, who had no real knowledge of the foreign country they were being sent to, and who did not apprehend for a moment the real nature of the employment offered. The provisions of this Bill were directed in the main against these low-class agencies. Counsel passed on to observe that when powers were granted by the 1905 Act they were necessarily of a tentative character, because there was no experience of the working of such provisions, except in Manchester. Therefore the powers were very limited in scope, and mainly confined to agencies for governesses, female domestic servants, and other female persons in similar capacities. The powers also extended to theatrical and music hall agencies where preliminary fees were taken, but where no preliminary fees were taken the Act did not extend to them. Accordingly they would find that practically, although not absolutely, all theatrical and music hall agencies were outside the Act. Then, under the provision of the Act the keepers of the agencies who came under the Act were compelled to register the names and places of business with the Council, and the Council were authorised to make by-laws requiring books to be kept, &c., for the prevention of fraud and immorality, but those by-laws were not applicable where no preliminary fees were charged. The Council were not authorised to refuse to register anyone. Anyone was capable of being registered, and the only way of getting rid of an undesirable person was to make application to a police magistrate, who in certain circumstances was authorised to expunge the name. But that power had been found to be ineffective. It was almost impossible when a person had got on the register to get the necessary evidence which would induce the police magistrate, sitting in a judicial capacity, to expunge that person's name unless that person had been convicted. So during the five years the Act had been in force there had only been five cases in which application had been made to a police magistrate, and in every one case that person had been convicted of some criminal offence. Experience had shown that the powers now possessed by the County Council were not sufficient to cope with the very serious evils arising from some of those employment agencies. The first great difficulty was that the County Council were bound to register any person who applied for it, however unfit and undesirable he might be. They had no discretion in the matter at all. They took no certificate of good character or anything else, and accordingly they would find that ex-convicts, persons of bad character, and other most undesirable persons—who, if there were any discretion vested in the authority, would never be allowed to carry on an agency—were registered by the Council. There was the very greatest difficulty in proving fraud when it was committed, because the persons who were defrauded hesitated to come forward. Counsel also pointed out that people abroad knew nothing as to the real meaning of that registration, and a man who might be a most undesirable man, but who had been registered by the L.C.C. as an employment agent, could advertise the fact both at home and abroad, leading applicants to think that was some index of respectability. As to theatrical and music hall agencies, of course, there were some of these which were quite respectable and high class, against which nothing could be said, but there were many others which were not in that category at all, and by not taking preliminary fees, or at any rate by saying they did not, they escaped all control, and were not required to be registered. It was absolutely necessary that these theatrical and music hall agencies should be under some control, and the committee would find that representations had been received by the L.C.C. from many representative societies—the Actors' Association, the Variety Artists' Federation, and the Actors' Union—supporting this Bill, and asking for an alteration of the law which would bring these agencies under control. Some of these theatrical and music hall agencies were of the very shadiest character; girls who were induced by advertisements to seek employment were defrauded. The girls had no knowledge of the stage; it was represented that they could easily get on the stage, whereas it was a very difficult thing to do—at any rate, as a remunerative employment; they were induced to spend their money in trying to do this and that, and then they found they got nothing. There were worse cases. These girls were sent abroad, and sent abroad in circumstances that could only result in their earning their living by immorality—a most serious evil. They would find that girls were being sent all over the continent of Europe, to Russia and South America, and unless something were done that traffic would continue. It was impossible to speak of these matters without a certain feeling of indignation that the law was powerless to interfere to prevent such terrible affairs.

The remedy suggested was licensing instead of registration. Under the present system the position of the L.C.C. was merely administrative, and under the proposed system it would be open to the L.C.C. to refuse a licence. That was to say, that before they granted a licence they would require some evidence that the applicant was a proper person to be entrusted with an employment agency, and a licence could be refused to a person who was not of good character. In those circumstances they would have no foreign convicts and persons of that kind setting up employment agencies in London. The L.C.C. already granted annual licences to many places, including theatres and music halls. It was proposed to ask the committee not to insert any power of appeal.

Mr. Fitzgerald then read the report on the Bill issued on May 27 by the Home Office. The Home Secretary first pointed out that as to the need for strengthening existing powers in respect of agencies already under regulation a distinction must be drawn between (1) registries for governesses, female domestic servants, &c., and (2) theatrical agencies. As regarded agencies for theatrical and music hall engagements, the Secretary of State understood that the existing powers had been rendered practically a dead-letter through the operations of the exemption for the agencies which did not take preliminary fees. In addition, he had had brought to his notice in connection with endeavours to suppress the white slave traffic several bad cases in which, apparently by misrepresentations on the part of the agents, young girls had been induced to enter into engagements abroad at music and dancing halls, &c., of the lowest and most undesirable class, and having once entered on their employment had been unable to free themselves, and had been led or forced into a life of immorality. Such cases could no doubt only be effectively dealt with under general legislation and by international co-operation, which the Secretary of State was glad to think was making progress; but meanwhile he would welcome the adoption for London of any further steps which, while not interfering unnecessarily and unreasonably with the proper conduct of such agencies, would be likely to be effective in suppressing this particular evil. The question as to the manner in which the existing powers should be strengthened presented, no doubt, considerable difficulty, but the Secretary of State was of opinion that the method adopted by the Council in the Bill was open to serious objection. As regarded theatrical, &c., agencies, the Home Secretary made the following suggestions for the consideration of the committee:—

(1) The exemption which the Act of 1905 confers on agencies taking no preliminary fees should be repealed, and the registration system, including the by-law making provisions, should be made to apply without reservation to all theatrical, &c., agencies.

(2) If the Committee find that greater facilities for cancelling or suspending registration were required, the powers for this purpose at present vested in courts of summary jurisdiction under the Act of 1905 might be extended to the Council in cases where proof is presented to them of misconduct.

(3) By-laws might be made supplementing No. 5 of the Council's existing by-laws for regulating the conditions under which the engagement of females for employment abroad may be allowed. It would probably be desirable to take specific powers for this purpose.

(4) There might be a provision inserted in the Bill directly prohibiting any agent from effecting any engagement for employment abroad in any music hall, dancing hall, or similar place in the case of young girls. This would be a drastic step, but might be justified by the evidence.

No (said Mr. Fitzgerald) let me pause here to make one remark. Anyone reading this report from the Home Office would not imagine for a moment that the County Council had been in communication with the Home Office for more than a year before and putting before them the proposals which were included in the present Bill and had never received any objection from the Home Office. On March 24, 1908, the Home Office sent a letter asking for particulars as to the working of the Act of 1905, and on March 28 the Clerk to the Council wrote a reply stating that the Committee of the Council whose duty it was to administer the Act were not satisfied that the powers given were sufficient for the protection of the public in the matter of employment agencies. On May 21, 1909, the Clerk to the Council wrote referring to previous correspondence, and formulating certain proposals for remedying the evil state of the law. The first proposal was that licensing instead of registration was essential if employment agencies were to be properly regulated. Other proposals were that agents not expecting preliminary fees should not be exempted from the necessity for obtaining a licence, that in the case of theatres, music halls, and variety places powers should not be given to inspect agents' books or prescribe the form in which the books should be kept, and that agents should be licensed under their usual trading name and only carry on business at their prescribed address. The committee should see that the principal provisions of the present Bill were suggested in that letter, which also stated that the London County Council desired that effect should be given to the proposals as soon as possible; if not, the Council proposed to apply to Parliament in 1910 for powers to give effect to them. The only answer the Council received was in reply to a letter inquiring whether the Home Secretary would receive a deputation. The Home Secretary wrote that owing to the condition of public business he saw no prospect of carrying his recommendations on the subject, and that in the circumstances no useful purpose would be served by receiving a deputation; but should the Council desire to proceed by private Bill, as suggested, he would, of course, give careful consideration to it. In that letter there was no suggestion of any objection being raised to the proposals by the Home Office or any suggestion of an alternative proposal. One would have thought that if the Home Office had had some alternative proposal the least they could have done was to communicate with the County Council in the matter. Take No. 4 suggestion in the report of the Home Office:—"There might be a provision inserted in the Bill directly prohibiting any agent from effecting any engagement for employment abroad in any music hall, dancing hall, or similar place in the case of young girls. This would be a drastic step, but might be justified by the evidence." That, of course, was a most serious alteration of the law, but if that suggestion had been made by the Home Office before the Bill was introduced the Council would have had an opportunity to consider whether they could introduce it into their Bill. How could they introduce an alteration of the law of that magnitude? The suggestion made was now of no assistance, and the Home Office report was only issued on May 27. One regretted that when a public body was making a strong effort to remove what was a crying evil the Home Office should now bring forward such a suggestion. Counsel concluded by reading and commenting on the petition against the Bill by the employment agencies and agents concerned.

Evidence was then called, the first witness being Mr. J. Ollis, chief officer in the Public Control Department of the London County Council. He said the most important difference between the old legislation and the proposed Act was the substitution of licensing for registration. The number of agencies at present registered by the Council was 596. In London especially, in connection with theatres, there was a larger number of agencies than in the provinces. When the Bill of 1906 was going through Parliament the Council applied that power to license should be given, but the Parliamentary Committee gave them instead the power of registration. Having had experience of the operation of the 1905 Act, the County Council considered what further powers were necessary, and passed resolutions, chief of which were that there should be licensing instead of registration, and that in the case of theatrical and variety agents powers should not be sought to inspect agents' books or prescribe the form in which the books should be kept. At the present moment the County Council had no protection at all.

Mr. Talbot: Licensing could enable you to keep an undesirable man out of the business, whereas registration only enables you to get rid of him when he has done the mischief?

Witness: That is the case. If we could have licensing there are some who would never apply for licence. There had only been five applications to remove persons from the register.

Mr. Talbot: I presume the great majority of agents are absolutely straightforward?

Witness replied "Yes," and proceeded to describe cases of persons of bad character getting on the register. If licensing had been in force he was convinced none of these persons would have applied. Glasgow was the only town in the United Kingdom where licensing existed. The witness next referred to the countries where licensing of agencies prevailed, and remarked that in some cases theatrical agencies were exempt from the liability to register.

At this point the Committee adjourned.

On Wednesday Mr. Ollis resumed his evidence. Replying to Mr. Charteris, he admitted that in the Act of 1905 the theatrical and musical agencies obtained a special clause exempting them from control except in cases where preliminary fees were taken or commission received before procuring employment. When the Bill was before Parliament the variety, concert, and music hall agencies opposed on the ground that they were then engaged in forming an association which would deal with the very matter, and their suggestion was that only persons of known honesty and good behaviour would be admitted to membership.

Mr. Charteris: And I think they also stated that it would be necessary for someone to set the criminal law in motion in connection with any agency that acted fraudulently, and that their association would be in a position to discharge that function.

Witness: Yes; that they would be able to pick out the black sheep of their own class. The association took no action until the end of 1908, but did not come into corporate existence, and a deputation which came did not succeed in satisfying the Public Control Committee. Representations had been made to the L.C.C. by the Actors' Association, the Variety Artists' Federation, the Actors' Union, and the Society of West End Theatre Managers, in which they urged that something required to be done in order to give protection. The matter had also been urged before the Public Control Committee by Mr. Bullock (the Assistant Commissioner of Police) and by Mr. Coote (of the National Vigilance Association). In the present Bill there was a provision exempting theatrical agencies from inspecting books, and this was inserted because such agencies were not carried on in the same way as the business of other employment agencies, and that as a matter of fact engagements were subjects of written contracts. Each engagement was the subject of a special contract, and for that reason inspection was not required.

The chairman remarked that if his recollection were correct there was some other reason given for inscribing the clause in the 1905 Act. Was it not that a large number of these theatrical and music hall contracts were confidential between the principals and the agents.

Mr. Blennerhasset: I think the reason given was that private contracts would be disclosed.

MR. ALEXANDER'S EVIDENCE.

Mr. George Alexander, who is chairman of the Theatres and Music Hall Committee of the London County Council, was present, and Mr. Charteris asked permission to call him at that point as he had an afternoon engagement at his theatre. Mr. Alexander then took the witness chair, and explained that he was present only as understudy to Mr. Cecil Raleigh, who was prevented from attending. I speak (said Mr. Alexander), on behalf of the Society of West End Theatre Managers and the Actors' Association. Those bodies are strongly of opinion that the powers proposed under this Bill should be granted.

Mr. Charteris: From your knowledge of the theatrical profession, are you aware of a great number of abuses of the character referred to, and, in your opinion, is the substitution of licensing for registration the only means of dealing effectively with these abuses?—I think it is desirable.

The Chairman: You are of opinion that theatrical agents should be brought within the purview of the law?—I am.

Mr. Charteris: Will you illustrate the abuses you have in your mind?—The principal evil arises from advertisements appearing in newspapers. In these advertisements agents—I am not speaking of the general body of theatrical agents, but only of a section—offer engagements to people without training or experience. Young girls answer them. They leave their homes in the country, often without consulting their friends, and find themselves in London. Their money is taken as fees by these unscrupulous agents and, as they are afraid to return home, very often their only refuge is the street.

As a member of the County Council you have had brought to your notice representations made by various authorities?—Yes.

In your view the elimination of disreputable agents would have the effect of adding to the prestige and to the business possibilities of the reputable agents?—It would, in my opinion, have that effect.

Mr. Ram, K.C., for the opponents, said he offered no objection to an extension of the existing legislative provisions to theatrical agents. Do you realise (he asked the witness) that the crucial thing the Bill asks for is not only substitution of licensing for registration, but power for the County Council to constitute itself sole judge, without any appeal against charges which are brought forward?

Mr. Alexander: I realise that, and I may say at once that I am in sympathy with an appeal.

Do not you think it would be sufficient if the class of agent of whom you speak were brought under the existing law?—I doubt it.

In what way do you think the law could be altered so as to meet the real evil?—I think, in the first place, it is desirable when an agent is applying for a licence he should have two responsible persons to answer for his character.

Could not that be done just as well with registration as with licensing?

The Chairman: Under the law at present anyone can demand registration.

The Chairman: Your position is that there are people carrying on the business of agents who you have reasonable ground to suspect are not fit and proper persons, but against whom you would have difficulty in proving a case before a magistrate; and you think that if you had the power to refuse licences, and did so, these people would not face an appeal?—Quite so. Unless it can be proved that a man is in touch with genuine employers, he ought not to be an agent. A very large amount of harm is done to the theatrical profession by bogus agents. People stranded by these agents sometimes find their way to the police-courts, and are there described as actors or actresses.

Mr. Ram: At present a man is arraigned like any other felon, and has the right to appeal, but under this Bill you would propose to do away with it.

Witness replied that he believed in an appeal. He agreed that a person should only be judged upon clear evidence and not upon mere suspicion.

Re-examined, Mr. Alexander said that if licensing were substituted they would not, in the first instance, have applications from undesirable persons. A very large amount of injury to the theatrical profession was done by bogus agents. Mr. Alexander then left the witness-chair.

The Chairman later remarked that, with regard to theatrical agencies, if any exemptions were to be made they would require strong evidence as to the reason why. He asked the parties to consider between then and Thursday morning whether what was really needed was an extension of the powers as regarded registration, subject to appeal, the Council to be given power to suspend or cancel such registration. What he had in his mind was a certificate of good character for an applicant for registration, and that should apply even to present agents.

Mr. Bulloch, the Assistant-Commissioner of Police, resumed his evidence. He described how foreigners of an undesirable class advertised for girls desiring theatrical engagements. Sometimes these men, after registering an agency in this country, went abroad and started branches, which they worked in connection with their London agent. He considered that in this matter much good could be done by having agents licensed instead of registered. Theatrical agents were not bound to register, and anyone could advertise as a theatrical agent.

The Chairman remarked that, in his opinion, no agent should be allowed to advertise unless he was registered.

At this point the Committee adjourned.

On Thursday consideration of the Bill was resumed.

Alderman Percy Simmons stated that until recently he was chairman of the Public Control Committee of the London County Council. With several members, he had interviewed some of the victims of the fraudulent practices complained of, and he could put in a statement showing that agents advertised for persons anxious to enter upon a stage career.

The Chairman intimated that the Committee were in favour of bringing theatrical and music hall agencies within the scope of the law, whatever that might prove to be.

Mr. Simmons added that a familiar method of the class of agents referred to was to advertise in newspapers. He would substitute licensing for registration; in fact, it was the only way to deal effectively with offenders.

Mr. Ram, K.C., said that he and Mr. Blennerhasset, K.C., were prepared to concede that some power should be conferred on the L.C.C. to enable them to do two things—to refuse registration in the first instance, and by that means keep off the list improper persons, and to insist on a certificate of good character in whatever way was thought necessary. It was something like that that Mr. George Alexander suggested on the previous day. In this way they would get over the initial difficulty of improper persons getting on the register and continuing their wrongdoing before they could be turned off.

The Chairman interposed with the remark that the Committee were in favour of granting power of appeal to applicants.

Mr. Charteris said the L.C.C. maintained the view that licensing and not registration was the most effective way of dealing with the matter. He took it that the Committee were satisfied that evils in connection with some agencies did prevail.

The Chairman: That has not been disputed.

Mr. H. W. Clemart (Chairman of the Variety Artists' Federation) was then called. That body, he said, had considered the provisions of the Bill and were in favour of substituting licensing for registration. They considered that licensing was the most effective machinery by which the interests of the various persons in the profession could be safeguarded, and that it provided the best method for preventing disreputable agencies from coming into existence in the first place. He had seen the proposal of the petitioners against the Bill with regard to certificates of character for applicants, and he would not object if his Federation gave that certificate.

The Chairman remarked that one knew cases showing the facility with which certificates of character from individuals were obtained.

Mr. Charteris: One would imagine it would be an easy thing to get a certificate from two householders, but perhaps you might also require a certificate to guarantee the householder. (Laughter.)

The witness observed that possibly the householders would know nothing about the agency. He had seen the names on the petition against the Bill, and, with the exception of one or two, the leading agents in the variety business were conspicuous by their absence.

Mr. Montague, secretary of the Restaurant and Hotel Employees' Association, with 140 branches all over the world, and 7,500 members, gave evidence in support of licensing; and that closed the case for the L.C.C.

Mr. Blennerhasset said he had consulted the opponents of the Bill, and they would accept either licensing or registration, provided it was not left entirely to the option of the L.C.C.

Mr. Charteris said the L.C.C. members in the room had been consulted, and were quite willing assent to an appeal to the courts where a licence was refused.

The Chairman thought the L.C.C. would also agree that where a person had applied for a licence and had made arrangements to open the agency, he should be able to carry on the business until the appeal to the police-court—and, if necessary later, to the Court of Quarter Sessions—had been heard.

Mr. Charteris said he would consent to that.

The Chairman then announced that the Committee had unanimously come to the conclusion to grant the general principle of licensing proposed by the Bill, subject to the double appeal, and that notice of objection to renewal of a licence be given, otherwise renewal would be granted as a matter of course.

Mr. Ram, K.C.: You don't suggest any preliminary terms as to sureties or a certificate of character?

The Chairman: No.

Mr. Ram: Anyone can apply, and if refused he can go before a magistrate?

The Chairman: Yes. We also suggest that the time limit for the appeal should be fourteen days.

The preamble of the Bill was then declared roved, and the Committee adjourned until Tuesday next, when the clauses as readjusted will be considered.

Patrons of the Empire, Wakefield, will learn with regret of the resignation of Mr. S. H. Laycock of his position as manager. He has won the esteem and respect of one and all, and will be greatly missed.

MUSIC HALL SCENE.

An incident which took place in the Bedford, Camden Town, on the evening of April 30 last year, resulted in an action for damages for assault and battery being brought against the proprietors by Captain Harvey Browarigg Jay, of White Lodge, Purton, Wiltshire. With the object of seeing the production of a sketch called Paid on Delivery, by the Brothers Cox, the Captain and two friends took a box. In the course of the evening they were requested to leave, and the Captain complained that great violence was used in ejecting him. On the other hand, it was pleaded that there was no unnecessary force in the circumstances.

Plaintiff was represented by Mr. Rose-Innes and Mr. Edwards (instructed by Mr. Charles E. Lacy). Mr. Hohler and Mr. Morle (instructed by Mr. Frank Daphne) appeared for the other side.

Mr. Rose-Innes explained that plaintiff was formerly lieutenant in the 2nd Battalion of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, and subsequently became captain in the Colonial Forces.

Plaintiff (examined by Mr. Edwards) said that on April 30 last year he telephoned to the Bedford Palace of Varieties and engaged a box. He was accompanied by two friends, Mr. Allan Morgan and Mr. Percy Stanley Sykes. A friend of Mr. Morgan's—Mr. Harding Cox—was appearing in a sketch. While they were in the box one of the performers was singing a song and appealing to the audience. Several shouted back an answer, and so did we. An attendant came to the box and requested us to make less noise. I replied, "All right," and turned my attention to the stage again. Mr. Sykes then asked me if I had paid for the box, and on my replying in the affirmative he said, "Will you please tell that fellow to shut the door?" Upon this several other attendants rushed in and shouted, "Out you go!"

His Lordship: A sort of chorus by all the attendants?

Plaintiff: One or other of them said it—perhaps two or three. I saw there was no use having a row, so I said, "Come on; we must go." I proceeded to take my hat off the peg and to leave the box. There was a flight of stairs just outside, and as I was going down an attendant immediately behind me kept hitting me in the back with his knee. The only response to my request that he should "chuck it" was a more violent blow in the back. I told him that if I had him outside I would give him a hiding. With that he seized me round the neck—resistance was absolutely impossible, of course—rushed me down the steps, and through the auditorium. I am told the swing doors were opened for him to fling me through. I missed the flight of steps, I suppose, and fell on to the kerbstone, where I lay insensible. I remember nothing further until I was in Dr. Cross's surgery in Regent's Park-road, being put to rights. By reason of the treatment I received my thumb will never be of use to me again. One of my means of livelihood was riding horses that refuse a bit. I cannot now carry my whip in my left hand, and I am utterly unable to ride a horse if it swerves to the left. I used to do very well. I also used to write poetry, and do very well at it. Now I am utterly unable to compose any poetry.

Witness denied that he and his friends threw lighted matches on to the people below, or spat upon them, or applauded at the wrong time, or disturbed the audience in any way. Ben Albert was on the stage at the time the fracas took place.

Mr. Percy Stanley Sykes also gave evidence.

Mr. Hohler (cross-examining): You all behaved exceedingly well?—According to my standard.

Is yours a high standard?—I am sure I cannot say. The house was orderly, and we were orderly.

Questioned about "back chat," witness said he had answered back when he had had the ready wit, but he did not often have it. (Laughter.)

Mr. Allan James Morgan, of West Hampstead, a solicitor, who said he did not practice, explained that he went to the Bedford Palace for the purpose of seeing Mr. Harding Cox in a sketch called Paid on Delivery. They joined in the choruses, and other people did the same. When spoken to by the attendant he remarked, "We had better leave quietly." Captain Jay and Mr. Sykes were hustled away, but no one put his hands on him.

Mr. Hohler, opening the case for the defence, said he proposed calling evidence which he ventured to say would satisfy the jury that the ejection of Captain Jay was justifiable, and that no unnecessary violence was used.

Mr. Harry Goodson, superintendent of the Bedford Palace in April of last year, said that on going into the box opposite to that occupied by Captain Jay, he noticed the people in the circle and gallery looking towards the Captain and his friends, and calling out, "Chuck him out!" or something to that effect. The gentlemen were singing different tunes from the artists, and were out of tune. They were applauding at the wrong time at intervals all through. When Ben Albert was on the stage Captain Jay and his friends began to chaff him, shout at him, and applaud him. He saw an attendant named Hempstead go to them three or four times, and afterwards saw Captain Jay being carried out by Hempstead. The audience were all shouting, "Chuck him out!" at the time.

Witness said that on this evening there was not a single performer at the Bedford on the occasion in question who invited answers or ostensible answers. There might have been songs which demanded choruses, but the song which Captain Jay kept singing was not on the programme at all.

Mr. Ben Albert, comedian, gave his version of the conduct of Captain Jay and his friends. He said that before he could open his mouth one of the gentlemen made a noise. He looked up and said, "Don't be a cad," but no notice was taken of him. He had only got to the end of the first line of his song when one of the gentlemen called out, "Rotten; get on." Upon this some of the audience called out, "Turn him out." He remarked, "He is only a baby; give him a rattle to play with." He did not indulge in what was called "back-chat." He could not get on, because of the interruptions.

The attendant Hempstead said that it was only when the Captain struck him on the left cheek—not a hard blow, but sufficient to discolour his eye—that he took hold of him and carried him outside. Witness did not fling him into the street. He simply dropped him. Nobody but himself went into the box on the night in question.

His Lordship, in his summing-up, observed that anyone visiting a place of entertainment had the right to express approval or disapproval within limits, mentioning two cases, in which Covent Garden Theatre was concerned, where this ruling was held good.

The jury, after consulting in private for about half an hour, found that Captain Jay's conduct was such as to justify his ejection, but that the force used was considerably more than necessary. They accordingly awarded him £100 damages.

His Lordship accordingly entered judgment for plaintiff for that amount, defendants being allowed costs on the issue in which they had succeeded.

The Penzance Borough Bench on Monday granted Miss Lily Pritchard a temporary licence for music and dancing at the Alexandra Grounds, where the Queer Quakers are now performing; and also granted to Mr. Alex. Corrison a music hall licence for a portable theatre to be erected at Wherrytown. Mr. Corrison informed our correspondent that the licence is obtained for the purpose of running a cinematograph show.

The next meeting of the Select Committee of the House of Lords to consider the Movable Dwellings Bill has been fixed for July 12, at 2 p.m.

Mr. Fred Connor opens his circus season at his headquarters, Douglas, Isle of Man, on Monday next. The company is a good one, embracing the best items in circus craft.

That veteran and highly-respected showman Mr. William Haggar, proprietor of one of the finest bioscope shows on the road, has just purchased outright the Royalty Theatre, Llanelly, South Wales. Mr. Haggar was negotiating for the erection of a permanent picture palace in Llanelly when the theatre was offered to him, and he at once closed with the offer. The theatre will be carried on on the same lines as it always has been; but Mr. Haggar will give at frequent intervals picture shows at it. The theatre will in future be known by the name of its proprietor, Haggar's Theatre.

Sedgwick's No. 1 Menagerie is making a most successful run through West Wales, and creating a very good impression wherever it stays. At Kidwelly it met with very great success. The show contains no less than twenty specimens of the King of the Forest, including two very small and charming baby lions. The performances in the dens of the wild animals by the two clever and daring trainers, and Miss Rosie's dance in the lions' den, were most sensational. The veteran proprietor has good cause to be proud of his show.

MOVABLE DWELLINGS BILL, 1910.

SECOND ARTICLE.

In our issue of June 18 we dealt with the Movable Dwellings Bill, with a special reference to the case against the Bill as presented by the Local Government Board and the Home Office. As these two great Departments of State would have to administer the Act, their views upon its provisions would have great weight with the Select Committee. It is obvious that private legislation seeking to strengthen existing law must come under the careful consideration of those who, in the end, would have to work it.

In our previous article we showed that the great mass of official evidence was against the Bill, the answer of the Government to its promoters being that all that could reasonably be expected from van-dwellers was already amply provided by existing laws. It is the purpose of this article to show that the position taken by the Government is the same as taken by the showmen. In his evidence-in-chief, speaking for show life, the Rev. T. Horne, the organiser and chaplain to the Showmen's Guild, submitted that the conditions of life amongst showmen, tested by all the standards of national progress, compared favourably with any other class of skilled workers in the country; nay, further, he expressed the opinion that there was a more deeply rooted ethical basis for the family life than obtained in many other sections of the community.

He claimed for showpeople as a class that there existed a greater honour for the marriage state, more ardent domestic affection, coupled with a careful observance of the decent amenities of life.

Contrasting the showman van-dweller with the gipsy van-dweller, he said that "show-life differed from gipsy life in this great essential particular—it must be lived in the great centres of population. The showman must at every point of his daily life carry with him the good opinion of his patrons—the show-loving public. Even a breath of suspicion against the health condition of show-vans is enough to ruin his trade.

"Through the ages of his industrial evolution the showman has had to be above suspicion on the question of possible danger to public health. This has led him to be ever on the alert to have the best type of living-van obtainable. The showman's van of to-day is a veritable model dwelling; in hygienic fitness superior to the great majority of permanent dwellings.

"With regard to sufficient sleeping accommodation for all the members of the family, and the necessary separation of the sexes, this has always been adequately provided.

"The provisions of the Bill as regards show-van life in these particulars are not necessary, for the showman has never neglected to provide for the necessary decencies of family life. In so far as the Bill includes all van-dwellers, the implication that legislation is necessary to secure decency of life is keenly resented. A visit to any typical fairground and a friendly inquiry of any mother of a family would reveal the fact that for generations showpeople have maintained a very high standard of domestic purity, and that the restraints and sanctions of family life are more effective amongst them than many other classes in the Commonwealth."

He claimed for them that the ordinary incentives to decency of life and freedom from disease were fully operative, and that special legislation was not needed, and concluded his evidence on this point by the following important statement:

"The age-long struggle of showpeople to retain the good opinion of their patrons—the public—compels the strictest attention and vigilance to thorough cleanliness of life.

"Arising out of this, it must be remembered that every inch of available space in the movable home has to be utilised, and, in consequence, no part of it escapes daily cleansing. Experience has bred a type of housewife that nothing but the most thorough work will satisfy.

"I know these homes as no other man can know them; I visit hundreds of them every year of my life. I was born in one of them, reared in one of them, and remember it still as 'home.'

"I hold that no legislative spur is necessary, other than the ordinary law of the land, to keep these homes sweet and clean. No other incentives are needed to maintain the purity of life in these homes other than those that move the life of the whole of the people—of whom showmen claim to be a necessary part—the inspiration of holy religion and the upward trend of social life.

"I agree with my people in their contention that if the Bill is meant to include all van-dwellers, it is not needed for them. They have at all times and in all places readily obeyed the laws of the land.

"I agree with them in regarding the Bill as an insult to their home-life, as marking them out as needing special legislation."

In support of this view, the Guild chaplain submitted that show-vans were already under the law.

Existing Law Covering Show-vans.

All the provisions of the Health Act and the whole body of the sanitary laws of the country apply to van life.

Section 91 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 and 39 Victoria, Ch. 55), is of great importance to our contention, for in a later Act—the Housing of the Working Classes Act [48 and 49, Ch. 72]—mention is made of tents and vans, and the penalties for van-dwellers not fulfilling the law are the same as those imposed upon all house-dwellers by Section 91 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

The Housing of the Working Classes Act specifically and clearly states in Section 9 that "(1) A tent, van, shed, or similar structure used for human habitation, which is in such a state as to be a nuisance or injurious to health, or which is so overcrowded as to be injurious to the health of the inmates, whether or not members of the same family, shall be deemed to be a nuisance within the meaning of Section 91 of the Public Health Act, 1875. (2) A sanitary authority may make bylaws for promoting cleanliness in, and the habitable conditions of tents, vans, sheds, and similar structures used for human habitation, and for preventing the spread of infectious disease by persons inhabiting the same, and generally for the preventon of nuisances in connection with the same."

Other clauses in the same section provide for the properly-authorised sanitary officer having the right of inspection of vans and tents used for living purposes.

Here we have enough law in all fairness for the possible demands of public health and security for the showman and his family life.

Still More Legislation.

The Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889 [52 and 53 Victoria, Ch. 72], Section 13 (1) provides that the Act applies to "Every tent, van, shed, or similar structure used for human habitation, in a like manner, as nearly as may be, as if it were a building."

The Infectious Disease (Notification) Extension Act, 1899 [62 and 63 Victoria, Ch. 8], makes the Act of 1889 operative all over the country by extending its operation to all sanitary districts that had not voluntarily adopted it.

Every living-van is a house for all health and sanitary purposes. It is as much under the rule and government of the sanitary and health authorities as any other building, permanent or temporary, used for human habitation. There is just the same law, and just the same liberty, for the van-dweller's home on wheels as the town-dweller's home of wood and stone. In the matter of all necessary safeguards for public health the law as it is is all-sufficient. It is just, because all must obey it. To endeavour to fix special and clearly invidious rules upon the showman that do not apply to householders in permanent homes is an insult and an invasion of his rights and liberties that every showman is bound to resist with all the vigour at his command.

He submitted that the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885, in Clause 9 fully provided for the care, control, and inspection of all movable dwellings, and in a supplementary paper tendered to the Select Committee by the executive council of the Showmen's Guild the words of the Act are quoted in full, as follows:—

(1) A tent, van, shed, or similar structure used for human habitation, which is in such a state as to be a nuisance or injurious to health, or which is so overcrowded as to be injurious to the health of the inmates whether or not members of the same family, shall be deemed to be a nuisance within the meaning of section ninety-one of the Public Health Act, 1875; and the provisions of that Act shall apply accordingly.

(2) A sanitary authority may make bylaws for promoting cleanliness in, and the habitable condition of tents, vans, sheds, and similar structures used for human habitation, and for preventing the spread of infectious disease by the persons inhabiting the same, and generally for the prevention of nuisances in connection with the same.

(3) Where any person duly authorised by a sanitary authority or by a justice of the peace has reasonable cause to suppose either that there is any contravention of the provisions of this Act or any bylaw made under this Act in any tent, van, shed, or similar structure used for human habitation, or that there is in any such tent, van, shed, or structure any person suffering from a dangerous infectious disorder, he may, on producing (if demanded) either a copy of his authorisation purporting to be certified by the clerk or a member of the sanitary authority or some other sufficient evidence of his being authorised as aforesaid, enter by day such tent, van, shed, or structure, and examine the same and every part thereof in order to ascertain whether in such tent, van, shed, or structure there is any contravention of any such bylaw or a person suffering from a dangerous infectious disorder.

(4) For the purposes of this section "day" means the period between six o'clock in the morning and the succeeding nine o'clock in the evening.

(5) If such person is obstructed in the performance of his duty under this section, the person so obstructing shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding forty shillings.

The Adequacy of the Existing Law.

But that was not all the evidence on the public health side of the question. In the showmen's brief against the Bill it was pointed out that the Vagrancy Amendment Act, 1898, applied with equal rigour to movable dwellings as to permanent ones; that the tent-dweller and the van-dweller were on the same footing as regards offences punishable under the Vagrancy Act with house-dwellers of all kinds.

Still further, existing law fully provides for the notification of infectious disease in a movable dwelling or caravan.

In order to make this point clear, we quote the Operative Clause of the Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889, as follows:—

3.—(1) Where an inmate of any building used for human habitation within a district to which this Act extends is suffering from an infectious disease to which this Act applies, then, unless such building is a hospital in which persons suffering from an infectious disease are received, the following provisions shall have effect, that is to say:—

(a) The head of the family to which such inmate (in this Act referred to as the patient) belongs, and in his default the nearest relatives of the patient present in the building or being in attendance on the patient, and in default of such relatives every person in charge of or in attendance on the patient, and in default of any such person the occupier of the building, shall, as soon as he becomes aware that the patient is suffering from an infectious disease to which this Act applies, send notice thereof to the medical officer of health of the District:

(b) Every medical practitioner attending on or called in to visit the patient shall forthwith, on becoming aware that the patient is suffering from an infectious disease to which this Act applies, send to the medical officer of health for the district a certificate stating the name of the patient, the situation of the building, and the infectious disease from which, in the opinion of such medical practitioner, the patient is suffering.

(2) Every person required by this section to give a notice or certificate who fails to give the same shall be liable on summary conviction in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts to a fine not exceeding forty shillings;

Provided that if a person is not required to give notice in the first instance, but only in default of some other person, he shall not be liable to any fine if he satisfies the Court that he had reasonable cause to suppose that the notice had been duly given.

1. The Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889, shall after the commencement of this Act extend to and take effect in every urban, rural, and port sanitary district, as defined for the purposes of that Act, in England or Wales, whether that Act has or has not been adopted therein before the commencement of this Act.

2. In any such district in which the Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889, has not been adopted before the commencement of this Act, that Act shall for the purposes of section fourteen thereof (which relates to the operation of local Acts) be treated as having been put in force on the commencement of this Act.

It is the showmen's contention that the cumulative force of these several Statutes fully covers all that the promoters of the Movable Dwellings Bill can reasonably expect to gain. Notice the argument. For all purposes of law, the Housing of the Working Classes Act brought every tent, van, or movable structure used for human habitation under the same control as other dwellings. That, however fragile or temporary the erection may be, it is for all purposes of health and sanitation a building within the meaning of the Health Acts and the Notification of Diseases Acts, and also, as regards morals and good conduct, it is as open to the search warrant of a magistrate as any other abode.

The evidence submitted by the Showmen's Guild on the health conditions of show van life was frankly accepted by the committee as conclusive proof of that part of the showmen's case against the Bill, and it is a matter of the greatest satisfaction to the whole body of travelling showmen that an opportunity has been afforded them of vindicating their domestic life from the ill-informed, and, we fear, in many cases prejudiced, aspersions of those who would if they could, to quote the words of the expert from the Home Office, "wipe the showman from the face of the earth."

We shall deal in a later article with the extraordinary powers to abolish fairs, sought by the Bill.

SHOWMEN'S GUILD AT BURSLEM WAKES.

Since the year of the most successful struggle to retain Burslem Wakes for the people the Guild has held a meeting at the annual wakes. Having impressed upon the Borough Council that the showmen were well organised and able to defend their trade and in a large measure help the people to maintain their ancient fair rights, the Guild Executive Committee thought it wise to continue that good impression by an annual meeting at Burslem Wakes. The meeting this year took place in Collins' Circus. In the unavoidable absence of the President of the Guild, Mr. P. Collins, Mr. T. Bentley, ex-Town Councillor and the highly esteemed local leader of the crusade against the abolition of the wakes, was unanimously voted to the chair. The principal speaker was the Rev. T. Horne, Organiser and Chaplain. Messrs. R. Stephenson, H. C. Humphries, C. Shaw, C. Hart, and other showmen and stallholders were present.

The Chairman's Address.

In opening the proceedings Mr. Bentley expressed his whole-hearted appreciation of the good work done by the Guild. Although not a showman in the fairground sense of the word, he was linked with them as an amusement caterer in being, as he was, one of the proprietors of the Burslem Hippodrome, an enterprise that until quite recently he had carried on single-handed. He knew something about shows and fairs, because he had had to defend the local fairs under the attacks made upon them in the past forty years. The local efforts to abolish the wakes he had always met with strenuous opposition. He and others like-minded had fought in years past for the people's fair rights. He had won and held for years a seat on the Borough Council very largely on the Wakes question. He was not now on the Council. He resigned his seat because of the federation of the pottery towns into one huge Corporation. He objected to federation on principle, and refused to serve on the Federated Borough Council.

He was proud to be enrolled as an honorary member of the Showmen's Guild. Of the benefits of combination for trade defence he was a strong advocate. Whilst the organised showmen had such leaders and workers as the Organising Chaplain and their President, not mentioning many others who had done such excellent work for the defence of the show business, the success of the movement was sure. He understood that the President had been called away that very morning on urgent business that would not brook delay. He was quite sure that only the most necessary call of duty would prevail to draw Mr. Collins away from the meeting. He felt honoured in being called upon to occupy the chair on that occasion. He was only too glad to render all the help he possibly could to their friend and champion, the Rev. T. Horne. He would have the greatest pleasure in renewing his annual subscription to the Guild Funds, and would now call upon the Guild Chaplain to make his annual speech on the work of the society.

The Guild Chaplain's Speech.

After an appreciative reference to the great part taken by the chairman, Mr. Bentley, in the fight for Burslem Wakes the chaplain passed in rapid review the earlier work of the Guild in vindicating the showman's life and character from prejudiced and fanatical attacks. The society was now in its twenty-first year of active usefulness. Originally founded with the definite object of defeating bad legislative proposals, it had widened out, and had increased its beneficent work to cover the whole domain of trade defence and social betterment. As a trade union it safeguarded the business and trading rights of all its members. As seeking to uplift the show business it encouraged all efforts to improve the amusements of the people, and to raise the status of the travelling showman. It was concerned in preserving the people's fair rights whenever threatened. In its Parliamentary work the society since 1896 had successfully opposed the proposals of sixty Corporations in private Bills sent to the Houses of Parliament to penalise or to prohibit the show business. He could not exaggerate the importance of this work alone. He asked the meeting to consider the condition of the showman's work and enterprise if these sixty centres of life had been closed to him.

"But that was not all."

Since the Guild began the work of vigorously opposing Corporations that attacked their business in Parliament the number of such proposals had rapidly decreased, until this last two years the number had gone down to two in each Session of Parliament. He asked them to imagine what would have happened if the Guild had not carried on this work. He did not doubt that the number of authorities seeking restrictive and prohibitory powers would have rapidly increased, and that a vast number of towns and villages would have been closed to their business. When people asked what good the Guild was doing to the small trader and the employee of the fairground the answer was clear and to the point. In Parliamentary work alone the society has secured the liberty of the smallest stallholder as also the biggest capitalist of the fairground to pursue his business in peace and quietness, and with liberty of life.

Other Details of the Work.

With regard to the Movable Dwellings Bill, they had submitted the showmen van-dwellers' case against the measure in full. So complete and satisfactory was the result of the evidence that he (the Chaplain) had tendered that he had been assured that the offer of further evidence which the Guild was ready and eager to submit would not be required. The Committee had heard all they needed on the showman's side of the question before them. Personally, he was proud of the position the Guild now held in public esteem. It was a great instrument for good, not only in protecting the travelling showmen, but in the no less important work of preserving the Fairs, Feasts, and Wakes of Great Britain for the people. He instanced the recent success of the Guild in saving three Metropolitan Fairs and the triumph of the showmen candidates at the Mitcham election as proof of the ever-widening influence and increasing power of the Showmen's Guild. He concluded his speech with an earnest appeal to support the society in its good work.

Votes of thanks to the Chairman and to the Guild Chaplain brought the conference to a close.

Guild Service at Night.

Collins' Circus was the scene at night of the popular service of the Guild. The assistant clergy of the Parish of Sneyd (in which the New Burslem Wakes Ground is situated) and the united church choirs materially helped to make the service a success. The circus was well filled. The Rev. T. Horne conducted the service and preached.

White City, Old Trafford.

Acceptable programmes are provided this week by the Band of the 1st Loyal North Lancashire Regiment. The fireworks on Saturday evenings by Joseph Wells, of Earl's Court, are much enjoyed by the crowded patrons of this favourite resort. The immense ball-room continues to attract great numbers to that favourite amusement of Lancashire people. The roller skating pavilion draws large numbers of votaries. The numerous outdoor shows and riding devices are kept working continually.

FILM GOSSIP.

Life in Our Navy and Army.

Patriotic in their conception and powerful in their appeal to the public, Mr. Alfred West's animated pictures of Life in Our Navy and Army justly stand in the forefront of kinematograph exhibitions, and their presentation last week at Eastbourne Pier created marked enthusiasm. Humorous pictures were also shown; and a splendid series of coloured films show wild birds at home, these nature studies being amongst the best it has been our fortune to witness. The programme concluded with a specially clear series showing the funeral scenes of the late King.

"Women Love to Weep."

Miss Hattie Williams, the American actress, has—says Vanity Fair—been giving her opinions of the changing conditions of the theatre stage. "The moving picture houses have helped to change the situation somewhat," she says. "They have injured the galleries of many theatres, and that has its effect upon the kind of productions that are demanded. It looks as if there would be not so much musical comedy and more serious drama. The men want the musical comedies, but the women—well, did you ever see a woman who didn't just love to weep? If she hasn't got any troubles of her own to weep over she must go to a tearful show and have it out there."

West's Pictures at Bournemouth.

At the Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth, last week, Mr. T. J. West provided a splendid up-to-date list of pictures. Harding Davis's famous novel, "Her First Appearance," is told very clearly through the medium of the cinematograph, whilst A Plucky Russian Maid is romantic and picturesque. The Newcastle Coal Mines of New South Wales, exhibited by the special permission of the Australian Commonwealth Government, is a picture of great interest to all those interested in the development of the national resources of our Empire. Laughter is supplied by such themes as Foolshead as a Porter, Max Ludner as The Short-sighted Duellist, It Pays to Advertise, We Want Your Vote, &c. That dainty little actress and vocalist, Miss Lucy Caine, who charmed Bournemouth audiences some few months back as Cinderella, sings some musical comedy songs in fascinating fashion.

Picture Palace for Merton.

Pathé's New List.

Next week Pathé's will release a number of subjects, the titles of which are Fra Diavolo, The Cat That Was Changed into a Woman, The Ordination of a Bonze (Buddhist Priest) in Indo-China, Lumbering in Sweden, Absent-minded Max, A Fickle Maid, The Awkward Recruit, His New Appointment, A Terrible Secret, The Luck of Marmaduke, Two Wrongs and a Right, and A Normandy Fair.

Cinematographs and Authors' Rights.

The Court of Cassation, Paris, on the 27th ult., gave an important decision affecting the rights of authors. The Court found that an author's rights in a dramatic production extended to any production of the scenes of the piece on a cinematograph.

Col. Fox and the Cinematograph.

Lieut.-Colonel Fox, chief of the London Salvage Corps, Southwark Bridge-road, recently gave a brief address before the Association of Professional Fire Brigade Officers upon the subject of "Non-inflammable Films." He said that all knew that in the past cinematograph films had been a source of grave danger on account of fire and panic, and anything that could be done to stop that danger was good. If they could arrive at a really non-inflammable film it must be taken up and encouraged, because it was going to save a lot of lives. He had a film with him which was marvellous, and which, he thought, solved the whole question of safety. He was unaware of the name of the manufacturer. Proceeding to test a piece of transparent film, Colonel Fox held it over a lighted spirit-lamp without its burning; had it been of celluloid it would have flared up at once. As soon as he put it into the flame, and held it there, it took fire, not suddenly, but (in his own words) slowly, as if it were wood, and it extinguished itself. Colonel Fox then placed a cigarette in his mouth, lit it, and held a piece of film against the smouldering end. Were the film celluloid, he said, he would not dare to do it. As it was, the burning cigarette bored a hole through the film, but absolutely refused to ignite it. He had no commercial interest in it, but he had informed the makers that he would do all he could to encourage it.

Ealing Cinematograph Theatre.

This house maintains its reputation as one of the most elegantly-appointed and up-to-date of the Pyke group of electric theatres. With its smoking lounge and tea-rooms it has all the attractions and sociability of a club combined with the, every day, more popular bioscope. This week the programme consists mainly of excerpts from Faust, accompanied with the string of melodies which has made this opera so famous, and Mr. Ashley M. Booker, who is now in command here, may congratulate himself on the presentation of such an excellent bill of fare.

Passion Play Film Withdrawn.

At the request of the Bishop of Gloucester, the management of Poole's Picture Palace, Cheltenham, have withdrawn the Passion Play film. The entertainment naturally suffers somewhat in consequence. However, a capital set of films are presented and appreciated. A newly-installed bijou orchestra is a welcome addition.

The Leicester Town Council on Tuesday evening passed by a large majority the lease and plans for another picture-hall, which is situated in the Town Hall-square, with the entrance in Granby-street. At the last Council meeting the plans were referred back, but satisfactory alterations were made. Leicester will now have seven picture-houses open in a short time. There are already three at work—namely, the Empire, in Wharf-street, and the Empress Palaces, in Mere-road and Belvoir-street. Three others are now now nearing completion, being situated in Silver-street, High-street, and by the side of the Boulevard Rink, and are expected to be opened to the public in a short time. The latest hall is to cost £3,000.

A Copy of "The Era" will be forwarded to any address in the United Kingdom for six stamps.

NEW MANAGER FOR BARRY.

Mr. William Minto is succeeding Mr. Arthur Brogden as manager of Mr. Leon Vint's Electric Palace, Barry Dock. Mr. Brogden, who is general manager for the whole of Mr. Vint's houses, has been resident at Barry since the opening in this district, and was previously manager of the late Hippodrome at Barry, that was destroyed by fire. He has had many years' experience in the "Profession," having occupied the position of manager of the Coliseum, Blackpool; Theatre Royal, Long Eaton; Gaiety and Empire Theatre, Dundee; and Theatre Royal, Workington. He also conducted his own companies, Dan the Rake and the Apex Chronophone Co.

Edward Pablo writes from Brighton under date June 25:—"Having read accounts in several papers re the death of Johnson, a centenarian acrobat, who stated he was with the original Sanger's and also with Hughes's Circus some ninety years ago, I beg to say that ninety years ago there was no Hughes's Circus, neither was there an original (or any other) Sanger's Circus on the road.

"In the accounts published of Johnson's career are just mentioned circuses that were not in existence and those that were in existence are not in any way referred to. The writers might have been near the mark had they talked about Ducrow's Circus, for that famous combination appeared before King William IV. and Queen Adelaide at the Palace Royal, Brighton, also before the late Queen Victoria and Prince Albert at Astley's Royal Amphitheatre on May 20, 1840.

"Then, again, there was Usher's Circus (I have one of their bills before me dated 1821); they would be in vogue about the time Johnson mentioned. He states that when they went to China there was 'a' juggler. What was the juggler's name? The only names he knew were Sanger, Hughes, and Malabar. He did not seem to know the professional terms. He said 'he could stand on his head on a pole,' whereas a circus performer would tell you he did 'the poleanders.' Johnson also said 'he could do somersaults on a horse,' not that he 'could ride a somersault act.'

"On looking through some old circus bills, some sixty in number, of Usher's, Pablo Fanque's Ducrow's, Hillier's, and Batty's, dating from 1821 to 1843—and between those dates Johnson should have been at his best—I fail to see his name announced, nor do I see a somersault-act rider amongst all the equestrians, and they were the best of their day—viz., Taylor, Andrew Ducrow, Hillier, Moseley, Stickney, Bottari, Pablo Fanque, Pablo Fanque, jun., Adams, Williams, Bell, Frost, Hinne, Moffatt, and Mackintosh. So that if he 'could do somersaults on a horse' (to quote the centenarian acrobat) he would have been quite a Halley's comet amongst these ordinary stars, and have also taken precedence of those other great riders that were to follow—viz., Macullum and Hernandez.

"It seems strange that my father (the late Pablo Fanque) was born March 17, 1795, in the same city (Norwich) as Johnson, and from boyhood travelled with a circus, becoming a proprietor about 1838 to 1871. I, too, was born in the circus business, and have been performing since seven years of age. Yet (barring reading of him in the papers this last five or six years) neither my father nor I ever saw Johnson or heard of him or met with his name on a bill or found him pitching with Malabar.

"The last time I met Malabar (by himself) was when I was engaged at the Scotia, Glasgow, in 1880. He was walking about the streets rigged up in his old Chinese dress. I have also asked two old circus boys, one eighty-one and the other just on ninety-three years of age, who have been in the circus business all their life until about twenty-five years ago, and they cannot place Johnson. So I have come to the conclusion that he never was a Halley's comet, but something like a rocket."

Feckenham Wakes.

Scott, with galloping horses, stalls, and throwing games, and C. Herbert with pony roundabout, hoop-la circles, and other amusements, afforded great delight to the people of Feckenham at their annual wakes.

From beginning to end the play is very thrilling.—S. Western Star. It met with a very favourable reception.—Reynolds's. THE WILSON BARRETT ORIGINAL VERSION of the Famous Play,
(BULLOCK VERSION),
by arrangement with J. Pitt Hardacre.
TOM WATT'S SPECIALLY-SELECTED CO., including
Mr. FRANK BERESFORD as Archibald Carlyle.
Mr. JOE ROWLAND as P.C. Bullock, and Miss IDA HERON as Lady Isabel and Mme. Vine.

Press Opinions.
The North-Western Daily Mail (Barrow), June 28: For years past it has been looked upon as an "old stager," but never as a back number. Its popularity with the public seems to increase instead of diminish. . . . In a most realistic manner, Miss Ida Heron fillies the rôles of Lady Isabel and Madame Vine. She takes both parts most excellently, her acting being fine. She awoke the sympathies of her audience by her good work, and she had a very popular reception at the close. In both death scenes, Miss Heron acted with power. Mr. Frank Beresford adds further laurels to his reputation for his work as Archibald Carlyle. . . . Attractiveness is added to the piece by the introduction of P.C. Bullock. Mr. Joe Rowland's impersonation of the constable caused endless fun and amusement, his funny sayings and doings being uproariously received.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

RE APPLICATIONS FOR ENGAGEMENTS.—All applications by either Artists or their Agents must be made to the Head Office. Lowest terms must be stated, and distinction made between salaries required for larger and smaller towns. Vacant dates should be stated. If a list of existing bookings be sent, it will render selection easier. Artists employing agents should accredit one only at one time, as the friction arising when several Agents are employed at the same time, all expecting the one booking to go through each of them, often renders it expedient to avoid that booking altogether rather than give undeserved offence to several Agents. New Acts seeking Engagements, or turns not rebooked (possibly because they have played a series of dates without introducing new business), will facilitate matters by having their acts seen by our Districts Managers. Their Districts and Postal Addresses are as follow:—

TOURS COMMITTEE.—LLEWELLYN JOHNS and DISTRICT MANAGERS.

EMPIRE THEATRE, SOUTH SHIELDS.—Artists and Agents wishing to submit TRIALS for their Acts in the North, should apply to the Manager, as Matinées are held every Wednesday for that purpose.

N.B.—MR. OSWALD STOLL or MR. FRANK ALLEN can be seen by appointment on all matters arising out of the above, and for the discussion of entirely new Numbers.

All Artists or Agents who communicate with our District Representatives must have made definite applications, in accordance with above directions, to the Head Office, at the same time, or just previously. Artists and Agents are requested to note that the Standard Theatre, Shoreditch, and the Terriss Theatre, Rotherhithe, come within the areas absolutely barred by us. Artists and Agents are also requested to note that the Hippodrome, Aston, Birmingham, comes within the area absolutely barred by the Grand Theatre and Empire Palace, Birmingham.

INSTRUCTIONS TO ARTISTS.—Artists must have at least Fourteen Band Parts for English Orchestrations, and Seventeen Band Parts for Foreign Orchestrations. Matter of Bill, Blocks, and Specimens of Pictorials FOR THE ABOVE THEATRES must be sent to Co-operative Offices, at above address, THREE WEEKS before Opening, failing which Artists will run the risk of having their Engagements cancelled. It is important that separate bill matter, blocks, pictorials, &c., for Dublin, Belfast, and South Shields, be sent direct to Mr. Frank Allen at the Co-operative Offices. IMPORTANT.—Artists must forward Copies of Songs to the STAGE DEPARTMENT, ABOVE ADDRESS, TWO WEEKS previous to opening, with Assignments for same, which will be returned. Artists are requested to note carefully that the clause in their contracts relating to rehearsals will in future be strictly enforced. Artists' Scenery, Properties, &c., MUST be fireproofed in accordance with the regulations of the Licensing Authorities. ARTISTS WILL CLEARLY UNDERSTAND THAT THEIR BUSINESS MUST BE FREE FROM ALL VULGARITY.

No order or contract for goods or services must be accepted for any of the foregoing theatres except upon receipt of an Official Form, issued from the Co-operative Offices, London, and signed by either Mr. Oswald Stoll, Mr. Frank Allen, or the Chief Accountant, otherwise the Company concerned will not be responsible for same, and will refuse payment. In special cases, where goods are required at once, suppliers must look to the individual placing the order, who will be personally liable, unless an official confirmatory order, signed as above, is received within forty-eight hours. Invoices must be sent to the Theatre, but monthly statements should be sent to the Co-operative Offices. The individual Company on whose behalf orders are signed is solely responsible for payment. The Management will not hold themselves responsible in the event of loss of or damage to any MSS., Songs, &c., submitted for consideration.

ACCRINGTON.—NEW HIPPODROME.—Proprietors, The Accrington Hippodrome Co.; Resident-Manager, Mr. Walter Mould.—The company here is headed by Elmo and Rego, knockabout eccentrics, who display considerable skill and ability. Those excellent speciality dancers, the Bros. Dean, have a great reception, and give a highly-finished exhibition; David Poole, novelty ventriloquist, is a great favourite, and has an hearty welcome; Kirk and Sarsaki, lady aquatic marvels, do a distinctly interesting swimming act; Ada and Gert, juvenile vocalists and dancers, have a flattering reception; R. C. Note, "swell" comedian, has the house with him in two capital chorus songs; Kathleen O'Hanlon Trio, in a musical, vocal, and dancing scena, are acceptable; Lily Arthur, comedienne and dancer, scores a success; and the Bioscope pictures complete the programme.

ALDERSHOT.—ROYAL.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Clarence Saunes; Resident-Manager, Mr. Jack Gladwin.—Variety is the order here, and a good programme has for the chief item D'Arc's Marionettes. It is indeed a marvellously clever exhibition, in which many "stars" are shown. It would take very little to imagine that these figures are in the flesh. Cambo and Castelle, the musical monkey and Italian maid, give a sensational musical act; Collin and Irene's exposition of thought-transmission is wonderfully clever; Bonnetti and Corrie as eccentric jugglers are laughter-provoking. Witty Wattie Walton, character comedian, is still a favourite; Revel and Ray, in dance, patter, and song, add to the attractions; Miss Mabelle May is well received for her graceful dancing; and Miss Gyp Hodgson as a vocal comedienne does well.

Hamilton and Locke's company Miss Dora Page, an actress of ability, sustains with touching tenderness, and in some strong passages with moving force, the character of Bessie, the heroine; Mr. Percy Dawsone as David Heath also scores a success; and Mr. Chas. Locke interprets the part of Frank Delannoy with skill and intelligence. Mr. Alexander Knight is forcible as Clement Harper; and Mr. H. Ryeland Leigh as Uriah Craven, the villain, is sufficiently callous. Mr. James McLeod as Bloater, Mr. John Meade as Scrubby, Mr. William Freemantle as Spriggins, and Mr. W. Portswood as Bob are effective exponents of character; Mr. Henry Bargate does well as Jack Crawford; as Clara Darrell Miss Phylliss Elton vividly depicts a designing, cruel woman; as Dorothy Heath Miss Cherry Veheyne finds ample scope for her dramatic talents; Miss Mabel Northam as Kate is capable; and Miss Laura Bitterne is fully equal to all demands as Mrs. Brown.

EMPIRE HIPPODROME.—Proprietors, Messrs. W. H. Broadhead and Son; Acting-Manager, Mr. W. Salmond.—After an absence of only a few weeks, when the success achieved was quite phenomenal, the evergreen play East Lynne was on Monday again staged by Mr. Tom Watts's company. THEATRICAL SPORTS.

STAMFORD BRIDGE, TUESDAY, JULY 5. 1910.

Unabated interest was again taken in the annual sports promoted by the National Association of Theatrical Employees, which were decided at the Stamford Bridge Grounds, Fulham, on Tuesday. Competitors mustered in strong force to contest for the trophies and costly prizes which had been provided, and added importance was given to the event by the presence of people distinguished in the dramatic world. The arrival of Miss Ellen Terry was signalised by loud cheers, and Miss Violet Vanbrugh, who had kindly consented to distribute the prizes, had a similar ovation. Mr. Edward Terry, Mrs. George Alexander, and Miss Marion Terry also graced the occasion, and in the intervals of duty in the field, Mr. James Carew, the chairman of the Sports Committee, and Mr. Fred Terry joined the party, who were constantly besieged by photographers.

Shortly after arrival Miss Vanbrugh was presented with a magnificent bouquet of sweet peas in a pretty shade of mauve and white pinks, and Miss Terry with a bunch of yellow roses.

Among others present on the ground were Mr. Hayden Coffin, Mr. Alfred Lester, Mr. Willie Clarkson, and Mr. F. H. Pedgrift, of The Era.

The day was favoured by fine and at times brilliant weather, and the various events were decided with all dispatch under the direction of Mr. Wm. Johnson, the indefatigable secretary. The attendance was the best up to the present, and gave encouragement for future years. The proceeds derived from the sports are divided between the benevolent funds of the Dramatic and Variety Theatre Employees' Provident Association and an "open" benevolent fund available to assist men and women employees whose case is recommended by a subscriber to the prize fund or by a donor of a prize, or by any theatrical or music-hall association.

MR. JAMES CAREW,
CHAIRMAN THEATRICAL SPORTS COMMITTEE, 1910.

Official Starter: Mr. George Thurling. Honorary Timekeeper: Mr. E. Arnold. Marksman: Mr. G. H. Dyball; assisted by the clerks of the course, Messrs. W. L. Rignold G. H. Brooke, Philip Sheridan, Philip Raphael, A. Malcolm, A. Palmer, H. J. Brett, F. B. Fidge, and H. Mather. Stewards: Messrs. C. Thorogood, Atterton, Stow, Porter, Bowmer, Phelps, Weaver, Bevington, Hooper, Pickering, Wood, Swift, Finnigan, Farrell, Dyer, Hall, Hodsell, Kemp, Beasley, and Palmer.

SUMMARY OF THE SPORTS.

Good form was exhibited in the contests, particularly in the Five Mile Cycling Championship, in which the favourite was defeated by a rider who developed unexpected prowess, and won a popular victory. The hero of the occasion was Mr. R. Lennock, an actor, who has not, if we remember rightly, before figured prominently at the sports. Only five competitors were left in the final, C. V. Marra having a spill in the third lap, though he pluckily mounted again, but retired after a few rounds. J. A. Hickling was the holder of the shield, which he wrested last year from E. S Dawson, who had held it twice in succession. In a trial of strength midway, Hickling took the lead closely pursued by Lennock. At the last lap, Lennock drew off in front, with Harman at his heels, who in turn was followed by Hickling, with the other riders close behind. In this order they remained to the end, Lennock winning a keen ride by two lengths, three lengths separating Harman and Hickling.

Lasting interest was aroused by the tug-of-war for The Era Challenge Shield. The twelve teams that entered were representative of London and suburbs, the Irish champions from the Dublin Empire not having crossed the Channel this year. The final lay between the Woolwich Hippodrome, the holders of the shield, and the Bedford Music Hall, and went in favour of Woolwich, by two pulls to none, who thus for a second year have the privilege of holding the prize, which is in the nature of a perpetual trophy. Loud encouragement was given to each side as it made its way to the scene of the struggle, and as one or other team, after long and strenuous endeavour, drew their opponents over the line, the cheers of their supporters were loud and inspiriting. The winning team, a regular band of stalwarts, got a tremendous reception.

The Ladies' Egg and Spoon Race was liberally patronised, the entries being swollen by the Kennedy Girls, who, to the number of a dozen or more, travelled to the ground in a waggonette. The customary merriment was aroused by the efforts of the fair competitors, all charmingly arrayed for the occasion. The exit of the eggs from their places in the spoons were followed by exclamations of dismay from their holders, and frantic efforts were made to regain ground lost through the time spent in picking up the elusive egg. Miss E. Barnwell, a curly-haired blonde, proved expert at handling the spoon and romped home an easy winner.

Plentiful entertainment was also provided by the Quarter Mile Obstacle Race, of which a water jump, a "slippery mountain," and a dustbin were only a few of the difficulties that confronted the contestants. The prizes included a silver challenge cup, and it was secured by the holder, J. Hurst, whose victory was in a measure due to the fact that one of his opponents, who had a capital lead, was too bulky to get through the sack, and for an alarming time stuck fast in the middle.

Great fun was occasioned by the boot race, and by the abortive efforts of the runners to secure their footwear, only to find that it had been thrown by their opponents ruthlessly to distant parts of the field. There was merriment, too, over the blindfolded race, and the amazement of a stout gentleman—who had run his course with remarkable rapidity considering his avoirdupois—when he took off his bandage and found himself in the neighbourhood of the scoring board was very comic.

Running honours were gained by P. H. Snowdon, who had greatly improved his pace since last year. He won both the 100yds. handicap and the quarter-mile.

The Mile Walking Handicap proved very interesting. All the competitors walked well, and kept within the limits of the contest, no one being disqualified. Toplis, who owed 130 yards, maintained a pretty pace, and passed the majority of his opponents at the first lap, while in the second he had little to make up. His strongest opponent was H. H. Jeapes, who had 6 yards start, and when Toplis overtook him there was an exciting neck-and-neck race to the end, Toplis eventually winning by about three yards.

Excitement was keen over the Four-Lap Relay Race, for a silver challenge cup held by the Lyceum two years in succession. Toplis' walking powers again proved superior, and enabled Whitmore, who took the flag from him, to cycle home first. A determined attempt was made by Dawson to secure second place from Hickling, but the latter got in on the mark.

The events gave the utmost pleasure to lovers of healthy sport, apart from the interest felt in the representatives from the various establishments, and those of the general public who were there were well repaid. Appended is the list of results.

Second Prize—A Case of Spoons.

Third Prize—A Silver (Gold Centre) Medal.

W. Kendal, Woolwich Hippodrome, 1; J. Fitzmaurice, Drury Lane, 2; H. Chilton, Haymarket, 3.

Additional prizes were given, one to Mr. A. George, master carpenter, Lyceum Theatre, who obtained the largest number of entries, and one to Mr. Raphael, also of the Lyceum, who sold the largest number of tickets.

THE PRIZE-GIVING.

The sports were succeeded by an interesting function, in which the popularity of the various leaders of the profession was publicly manifested. Miss Vanbrugh proceeded to the spot where the prizes were laid out, the value and variety of the awards exciting many expressions of admiration. Miss Vanbrugh had a gracious word of compliment for every winner, and Miss Terry interjected amusing commentaries. The various victors were loudly cheered, the actor who had won the cycle championship—a handsome young man with a face of decided character and a musical voice—coming in for special applause.

A vote of thanks to the ladies and gentlemen who had given prizes was proposed by Mr. James Carew. Their gifts, he said, symbolised more than their actual value; they symbolised the brotherly feeling that they of the profession experienced towards all connected with the stage. They thanked Miss Vanbrugh with all their hearts for so graciously and kindly coming there that day. (Cheers.)

Miss Vanbrugh said in reply: I want to thank you very much indeed for the honour—the very great honour—you have done me in asking me to come here to-day. If in my own life I receive one-tenth part as many prizes as I have given away this afternoon I shall feel amply satisfied. The first prize I received was when, as a very small girl, I took part in a village school treat, and entered for five races, covering myself with glory by winning the first, the prize for which was a box of sweets. My sense of taste must have been very much keener then, because I ate the whole box of sweets, and thus disabled myself from taking part in any more competitions for that afternoon. (Laughter.) I thank those of the music-hall profession for the graceful compliment they have paid through me to my sisters in art in asking me to come here to-day. Early in this year I made my first appearance on the music-hall stage, and I devoutly hope it will not be my last. On behalf of those who have won prizes this afternoon, I thank in the name of the committee, those ladies and gentlemen, members of the most open-handed profession in the world, who have given prizes, for their generosity and kindness. Also I want to thank your committee for giving me this beautiful bouquet, and especially for asking the sweetest flower as well as the gracious queen of the English stage—Ellen Terry—to give it to me. (Cheers.) No words that I can say can express one half what Miss Terry's friendship has meant to me both on and off the stage; but she knows she has my heart. Her geniality and tenderness towards everyone in front of the curtain is only equalled by her tenderness and geniality behind the scenes.

There were renewed cheers for Miss Terry and cries for a speech, which the eminent actress acknowledged by a bow.

Mr. James Cullen said as President of the National Association of Theatrical Employees he had the greatest pleasure in proposing a vote of thanks to Mr. James Carew, the husband of Miss Terry, whom he had known for many days. Mr. Carew had worked very hard and energetically to bring the sports to a successful issue, and he was delighted to say they would be able to add something substantial to the benevolent fund of the Association.

In acknowledgment, Mr. Carew said it had been a great pleasure to him to do his little towards keeping alive an institution that did so much good and charitable work. If his efforts had been at all successful he would be more than repaid if they had helped to keep the wolf from the door of a few people connected with the profession. As the years went on they hoped to increase the numbers by a great many. (Cheers.)

The progress of the sports was agreeably enlivened by a well-assorted selection of music by the Alexander Imperial Military Band, under the direction of Mr. George H. Anthony, A.M.U.

BEN GREET ACADEMY OF ACTING.

The pupils of the Ben Greet Academy of Acting gave a performance at the little Studio Theatre in Bedford-street, Strand, on Tuesday afternoon and evening last. The pupils may be said to have acquitted themselves admirably, and had evidently been carefully taught, their elocution in nearly every instance being particularly good. The bijou theatre was well filled by an appreciative audience at the afternoon performance, the first item in the varied bill being the Casket scenes from The Merchant of Venice. Mr. Alfred Dight capitally realised the part of the Prince of Morocco, and spoke his lines excellently, the Prince's passion for Portia and his disappointment when he discovers he has chosen the wrong casket being skilfully shown. Mr. Ralph Gaffagan made an ardent and gallant lover of Bassanio, his scene with Portia at the conclusion being especially effective. A delightful representation of the character of Portia was given by Miss Charie Hardy, who can be warmly commended for her artistic performance, and Mrs. Hardy also distinguished herself by her easy and natural portrayal of Nerissa. The other parts were all capably undertaken. In a scene from King John, which followed, Miss Isobel Clare made an excellent impression as Arthur, her pleadings to Hubert being very pathetic and her performance throughout praiseworthy, Mr. Ralph Gaffagan submitting a convincing portrayal of Hubert. The recitation "The Jewish Maiden" enabled Mrs. Hardy to display her elocutionary powers to advantage, and her rendition was very impressive. Cosmo Gordon-Lennox's amusing playlet The Impertinence of the Creature was capitally enacted, Miss Daisy Desmond making a charming Lady Millicent, and Mr. Alfred Dight cleverly depicting the embarrassment of the "unknown gentleman," who thinks everything is "ripping." The concluding item in the bill was the lyric drama King René's Daughter, in which especial praise must be awarded Miss Mary Clare for her natural and in every way admirable performance of the beautiful character of the Princess Iolanthé, King René's blind daughter, her scenes with Count Tristan being particularly well rendered. Mr. Dight and Mr. Gaffagan again did excellent work, and Mr. Alexander Argenti as the leech, Ebn Jahia, submitted a quietly impressive performance. Miss Daisy Desmond was not well suited in the rôle of Sir Geoffrey, but the other parts were all creditably enacted by pupils mentioned above. In the intervals—somewhat lengthy, doubtless owing to the limited stage room—Mrs. Fewlass Llewellyn played many acceptable pianoforte selections; and at the conclusion Mr. Llewellyn, the stage-director, was "called" by his pupils and loudly cheered.

BODY AND BRAINS.

Sir,—I have read the letter in your issue of June 25 headed "Stage Qualifications," in which the writer infers, as far as I am able to judge, that it is the custom of managers to choose persons to impersonate characters in plays from their external appearance alone, regardless of whether a mind lurks in the presumedly beautiful body. I can hardly agree with this, as any person who appreciates the production and performance of a play, whether that person be a layman or what is usually termed an "artist," has only to witness the graceful and complete productions usually seen upon our West End stages, and then witness the same play some years afterwards presented by, no doubt, intensely clever people who had not been individually selected for their various parts, to acknowledge that the judgment of the original producer in his selection of bodies or minds, or both combined, was not so much at fault, after all.—Your faithfully,

NORMAN V. NORMAN.

On Tuesday, July 5, the Revival of "SOCIETY."

"Society" usually has a strong voice in matters of taste and fashion, and the late Tom Robertson's Society had its share in an unusually large degree in shaping the fortunes of the gifted author. After being rejected on all hands, it made the name, fame, and fortune of the dramatist. Byron of Our Boys fame first helped to bring this play, which was first produced by Alexander Henderson at Liverpool in 1865, into prominence by calling Marie Wilton's attention to it. Lady Bancroft (as she is now) took a fancy to the play, and her production at the Prince of Wales's, Tottenham-street, took the fancy of the press and public. The very points which were open to question were the most approved of all, notably the scene where Bohemian journalists of the out-at-elbow sort forgathered at "The Owl's Roost." The life-like human nature of the piece appealed to audiences all unused to anything but the theatrical and garish.

Society, unlike Caste, was most likely better suited to the period when it was produced, less ideal, and possibly more subject to the stress of time. This interesting revival at the Coronet is the first for twenty-nine years, when Lady and Sir Squire Bancroft produced it in 1881. Mr. Arthur Wontner is a very manly, interesting, and agreeable Sidney Daryl; Mr. Edward Lass comes out very strong in the part of the journalist; Tom Stylus, a rôle which he renders in most impressive and realistic manner; Miss Rose Begarnie is most charming and natural as Maud Hetherington; and Miss Adeline Bourne acts with appropriate acerbity as Lady Ptarmigant, a part which does not give her much scope for her undoubted emotional ability. The part of Lord Ptarmigant is safe in the hands of Mr. O. B. Clarence, and as a portrait of fretful and senile old age ranks with his other excellent work; Mr. Charles Hartley as John Chodd, sen., is good; and Mr. Lionel Rignold is every inch a snob as his highly objectionable son; and his character acting in the part is unmistakably realistic. Many other excellent silhouettes of some of Robertson's journalistic comrades are presented by the representatives of the members of "The Owl's Roost" by Messrs. James R. la Fane, W. G. Fay, James Skea, J. H. Brewer, Martin Yorke, William Rokeby, F. Hutchison, and Whitford Kane. All the parts are well played, and the whole revival is most interesting and instructive. Mendelssohn's music is played by the Chamber Quartet, under the direction of Mr. W. Meyer. Progress, to be produced on the 18th inst., is to be dressed in the Early Victorian period.

ELEPHANT AND CASTLE THEATRE.

On Monday, July 4, for the First Time in London, the Romantic Play entitled

"LOVE THE CONQUEROR."

William of Orange	Mr. Eric S. Crowther
Brian Norval	Mr. Frank Lindo
Sir John Mortimer	Mr. Sidney Dench
Count Leon Lascelles	Mr. Leonard Laurence
Capt. Rupert Armadale	Mr. Norton Shields
And. Albertree	Mr. Harry Belford
Peter	Mr. Bert Dench
Gaoler at Taunton	Mr. Gerald Rogers
Nicholas	Mr. W. Gregory
Dame Norval	Miss Nellie Benson
Susan Shortly	Miss Helen Holmes
Beatrice Mortimer	Miss Marion Wakeford

A capital story of romance and chivalry is unfolded in Mr. Mark Lindo's new play, Love the Conqueror, which was produced for the first time in London at this theatre on Monday evening last. We have a hero with a true Wallerian style, afraid of no one, and ready to fight the world for his lady love, who, of course, is blessed with all the world's graces and virtues. Brian Norval, who is a highwayman known as the "Prince," has been outlawed by James II., and has taken to the road as a means of livelihood. The play opens at the Blue Posts Inn, where a King's officer appears on the scene with a proclamation offering a reward for the outlaw's body dead or alive. Immediately the officer leaves the Count Lascelles arrives, and states that he has been robbed of all his possessions by a highwayman. Brian Norval comes to the inn (the innkeeper being his friend), meets, quarrels, and fights with the Count Lascelles and wounds him, thus making him a complacable enemy. Brian Norval recounts a story to the innkeeper of how he that day had robbed an old gentleman and his daughter. They arrive at the inn, and tell the story, saying their coach is in the ditch. Norval offers his services, which are accepted by the old gentleman, who is Sir John Mortimer travelling with his daughter Beatrice. The scene finishes with Brian Norval becoming fast friends with Sir John and his daughter, much to the disgust of Count Lascelles. A meeting of the adherents of William of Orange is held in Sir John Mortimer's house, their object being to overthrow the reigning monarch, James II., and here Beatrice gives Count Lascelles an opportunity to prove his love for her by taking a letter to Lord Churchill in London. The Count, having no liking for such a dangerous mission, refuses, and Brian Norval offers to go instead. His offer is accepted, and on his way he visits his mother's cottage, where he is entrapped by the wily King's officer. He, however, escapes and delivers his letter. On his return he is again arrested and condemned to die, but is saved by Sir John's daughter, Beatrice, who has by this time fallen hopelessly in love with the brave outlaw. Needless to add, Norval returns her affection, and the play ends with the union of the two lovers, a knighthood being conferred upon Norval by William of Orange for bravery, and villainy, in the person of Count Lascelles, receives its due reward by being summarily shot.

Mr. Frank Lindo makes up well and scores a great success as the swashbuckling hero, Brian Norval, seeming thoroughly to revel in rescuing fair ladies and performing wonderful feats of valour; Mr. Eric S. Crowther makes an impressive figure as William of Orange; Mr. Sidney Dench is the fine old English gentleman to the life as Sir John Mortimer; and Mr. Leonard Lawrence plays well as the saturnine and cowardly Count Leon Lascelles. Mr. Norton Shields distinguishes himself as the rough soldier of fortune, Captain Rupert Armadale; the character of And. Albertree finds a most capable representative in Mr. Harry Belford, and Mr. Bert Dench is also distinctly to the fore as Peter, with a great fund of dry humour. Miss Nellie Benson plays pathetically as the sweet old Dame Norval; and Miss Helen Holmes infuses a good deal of comedy into the part of Susan Shortly. Miss Marion Wakeford has a good many opportunities offered her in the character of Beatrice Mortimer, and she takes full advantage of same, playing throughout in a natural and sympathetic manner which quickly gained the approval of the audience. The production is well staged throughout, and the costumes for the most part are good.

NEW LYRIC, HAMMERSMITH.

On Monday, July 4, the Play entitled

"EAST LYNNE."

This piece is holding the attention of big audiences, and particularly fascinates the gentler sex. Mr. Leonard Yorke ably interprets the part of Archibald Carlyle; and Francis Levison meets with adequate treatment at the hands of Mr. George R. Montford. Mr. Chas. E. Dering is happily cast for Lord Mountsevern, while Mr. Arthur E. Maskell takes the rôle of Ebenezer Walker in a manner much appreciated by the audience. Mr. Thomas Barry makes a very good comic as Justice Hare; Richard Hare is well represented by Mr. John Blake. Miss Muriel Marsden is eminently successful in the dual rôle of Lady Isabel and Mme. Vine, being especially good in the scene of the death of Little Willie, a part ably sustained by Miss Winnie Rousby. Miss Mary Hardacre as Cornelia Carlyle is good, and Miss Dorothy Clifton as Barbara Hare is charmingly effective. Reuben Hallijohn finds a sympathetic impersonator in Mr. Lewis Aldwin. Mr. Otway Bethel is successfully treated by Mr. George Harding; Miss Lydia Bland is good as Afy Hallijohn; and the parts of Detective Jones (Mr. L. Ritchings), Joyce (Miss Ethel Lockhart), and Wilson (Miss Lottie Chesterman) are suitably allotted.

THE SHAKESPEARE.

On Monday, July 4, the Drama, in Five Acts, entitled

"THE STREETS OF LONDON."

A goodly crowd assembled at the Shakespeare Theatre on Monday evening to witness the opening performance of Dion Boucicault's sensational drama, The Streets of London. The piece was excellently acted, and the staging left little to be desired, the fire scene, especially, being very realistically presented. Mr. Julian Cross scored a decided success in his thoroughly sound representation of Badger. He made light of the difficulties of the part, and his clever acting evoked sustained applause; Mr. William P. Sheen's talents were well employed in the rôle of the needy but generous Puffy, and his sterling work greatly added to the success of the play. Mr. Kenneth Black enacted Captain Fairweather with much earnestness; Mr. Frank J. Robertson played Paul in manly and vigorous style; Mr. J. Ridgway Thorne as Mark Livingstone acquitted himself with credit; Mr. Herbert Hollister presented a careful study of the scheming Gideon Hardman, and having a thorough grip of the character, made it stand out very prominently. Miss East Robertson skilfully portrayed Alida, and acted throughout with dramatic force; Miss G. Middleton gave a very natural representation of the sorely-tried Lucy, winning sympathetic applause; Miss Julia Summers as Mrs. Puffy contributed valuable assistance; and Miss Jessica Black done all that was possible in the rôle of the boy Dan. The comfort of the audience was well attended to by Mr. H. Percival Young, the acting-manager, for Messrs. Bennett and Bennett.

KENNINGTON THEATRE.

On Monday, July 4, the Drama, in Five Acts, by G. R. Sims, entitled

"THE LIGHTS OF LONDON."

The Lights of London has drawn big and appreciative houses here. The local setting of the Borough especially appeals to South London audiences, and, on the whole, the play has been excellently staged and well acted. The story is full of exciting incidents, blended with plenty of comedy; so that the attention of the onlooker is riveted throughout. The two leading rôles—those of Harold Armytage and Bess, his wife, were played by Mr. Walter Gay and Miss Jessie Winter with much keen intensity. Mr. Gay was an admirable hero, and gave a fine study of the hunted man, who had been wrongfully convicted. Miss Jessie Winter was a lovable Bess, playing with genuine sincerity of feeling throughout, and looking very pretty. Mr. Maitland Marler and Miss Lucie Evelyn surpassed themselves in the comedy rôles of Mr. and Mrs. Jarvis, the travelling players, and were ably supported by Miss Elsie Videan as Shakespeare Jarvis. Mr. Marler has a wonderful fund of humour, and he kept the house in continuous merriment whenever he was on the stage. Mr. Frank Crimp doubled the parts of Squire Armytage and a detective, and was equally good in each. The second rôle he enacted with especial skill. As Clifford Armytage, that clever actor Mr. Fred Morgan won fresh honours, delineating the character with remarkable fidelity. Seth Preene was represented by Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who gave a vivid study of the villain's remorseful accomplice. Mr. Wilson Blake deserves high praise for his amusing sketch of Philosopher Jack, and Hetty Preene was finely impersonated by Miss Winifred Whyte. Among the representatives of smaller parts, Mr. Herbert May must be singled out for his faithful representation of the police officer, both as constable and superintendent, and Mr. Horatio Baker made a sturdy workhouse porter. Miss Marie Clayton as Sal, Miss Maggie Hogan and Miss Winnie Booth as the servants, Mr. R. Harbord as the broken-down masher, Miss Doris White as the street arab, Mr. Slade as a solicitor, Mr. Walter Blake as Bess's father, and Mr. A. St. John as the boy in the travelling show were very good.

THE PAVILION, E.

On Monday, July 4, the Drama entitled

"MAN AND WIFE."

The above drama, from the pen of Walter Howard, is attracting large audiences. The stock company still occupies the boards, and does full justice to the play. As Paul Revere Mr. Ashley Page acts well and carefully, not the least of his good qualities being his distinct enunciation; Marcelle is played by Miss Marion Denvil with great intelligence and much sweetness and gentleness; Mr. Oswald Lingard is admirable as the ruthless Colonel Satour, vividly depicting the evil nature of the part. The other characters are in capable hands; and from start to finish the performance goes without a hitch.

WOOLWICH THEATRE ROYAL.

"THE 10.30 DOWN EXPRESS."

This old and popular drama, now in its twelfth year of tour, has been played in practically every country in which the English language is spoken. It is being presented here by Mr. Horace Stanley and a powerful company, and was accorded on the night of our visit a hearty reception. The piece abounds in exciting incidents blended with a fine vein of humour, and with elaborate scenery and powerful acting is ensuring full houses. As Jack O'Malley, a manly hero, who in the course of the play is practically a "Jack-of-all-trades," Mr. Ernest Fare does extremely well; Mr. George Arthur receives his share of hisses and howls from the pit and "gods" in his representation of James Inderwick; Mr. Edwin Clarke makes the most of Huntly Mason, of Scotland Yard; the broker's man, Baggs, is well played by Mr. A. E. Francis; Sam Wagstaffe, A.B., as presented by Mr. Horace Stanley, is really funny, his business with Peggy Potts, cleverly delineated by Miss Kate Kilpack, creating any amount of fun. Miss Ida Fane as the Suffragette, Letitia Leigh, is effective, and Miss Cora Linda is a sympathetic Bessie Leigh. The remaining characters are played by experienced artists.

ARTILLERY THEATRE, WOOLWICH.

On Monday, July 4, the Comedy entitled

"THE GIRL FROM KAY'S."

By arrangement with Mr. George Dance, Mr. Neville Claude's company is playing this most successful musical comedy. Apart from the general attractiveness of the piece, there is some capital part-singing in the second act, and a trio given by a pierrot and two pierrettes (Mr. Jameson Thomas and Misses May Wiltshire and Leamy Green) is enthusiastically received. A powerful company includes Miss Florrie Millington, who has been specially engaged for the title-rôle, in which she is most successful. Mr. J. W. Hooper, as Max Hoggenheimer, keeps the audience in roars of laughter; Miss Rosie Bernett gives a finished representation of Norah Chalmers; from the part of Norah's maid, Ellen, Miss Dorothy King extracts much fun; Mr. Chas. Leverton as the Hon. Percy Fitzthistle is on the top of his form and meets with approval all round. Mr. Harold Perry is a capital Harry Gordon, and the remaining members of the cast, some twenty in number, are practical and experienced artists, who do not allow the play to flag for an instant. The chorus and augmented orchestra, under the direction of Mr. T. D. Lewis, do everything that is required of them right well.

MEMORIAL THEATRE MEETING.

A meeting was held on the 30th ult. at Christ Church Parish Hall, Edison-road, Crouch End, in connection with the movement for establishing a Shakespeare Memorial National Theatre.

The Mayor of Hornsey (Councillor W. Gaskell) presided.

Among the letters read was one from Lord Ronaldshay, M.P. for Hornsey, who in expressing his best wishes for the success of the meeting, stated that the prospect was one which had his heartiest approval. It was one which he felt sure would meet with a ready response from the public.

The Mayor said the meeting had been called in furtherance of a resolution by the Town Council, which requested him to convene a meeting of the burgesses at an early date to consider the question of the proposed national theatre. A number of municipalities were taking an interest in the work and associating itself with the movement. They felt that Hornsey not only ought to have the opportunity, but ought to take its share in the scheme put forward. The scheme would not mature until 1916, the tercentenary of Shakespeare's death, so there would be ample opportunity for anybody who wished to give a donation to the fund to make is as easy for themselves as possible by spreading it over that period of years. The committee had received £70,000 from an anonymous donor, and they had a great prospect of raising the money if they could get the support of the municipalities. Their meeting that night was not a large one, but great things sometimes had small beginnings. The idea was to have a local committee formed, and for meetings to be arranged in various wards. They hoped to approach the inhabitants so that everybody would have an opportunity of giving. The English people were slow to recognise genius. They had been three hundred years in making an effort to recognise Shakespeare. Foreign countries had their national theatres, and there was no reason why England, the richest country in the world, should not have one also.

A summary of the movement, its aims and objects, and the useful purpose which a national theatre would serve, formed the subject of an interesting address by Mr. Perris, the organising secretary.

Dr. Brackenbury moved a resolution pledging the meeting's hearty support of the movement, and that it would use its best endeavours to get a substantial local contribution to the fund. The mere statement of the two objects they had in view, he remarked, was enough to carry conviction to all those who pretended to any interest in the educational and literary and artistic welfare of the country. It appealed to him as a great national movement in which all sorts and conditions of people throughout the Empire could be associated, with the object of commemorating a glorious past and at the same time to help in organising a movement to help the present and to benefit the future. It could be described as pre-eminently a great national movement, a great Imperial movement, in which all of them could feel an honour to take part. The more they knew of Shakespeare's view of life, the more tolerant, the more genial, and the more sympathetic they were bound to become in their relations with their fellow-men, and that was something worthy of a great commemoration.

The resolution, seconded by the Rev. C. J. Sharp, and supported by Mrs. Pigott, was unanimously agreed to, and the meeting proceeded to the question of appointing an executive committee.

THE WEST LONDON.

On Monday, July 4, the Drama, in Three Scenes, by W. J. Patmore, entitled

"THE JAWS OF DEATH."

This thrilling playlet was quite to the taste of the emotional West Londoners, who always eagerly welcome dramatic fare of this sort. The working of the mechanical hydraulic press in the coiners' den was most realistically done, and the snatching of Ned Dexter from "the jaws of death" was welcomed with cries of relief. Mr. Edward Cranston as Teetotal Jim played with all his old-time energy and resource in characters of this kind, and was most successful. Mr. Raymond Wood enacted the coiner, Michael Fawn, who posed as a slum missionary in a characteristically revolting fashion; Mr. Ronald McHugh portrayed Ned Dexter in a finished and convincing way, and also spoke his lines admirably; whilst that always popular and experienced actress Mrs. Bennett sustained the rôle of Nellie Dexter with all her accustomed ability and effect. Several pictures were clearly screened during the evening, amongst the best being Tommy's Locomotive, Trials of a Chauffeur, The Barber of Seville, and Foolshead Wants to Marry. Mr. F. R. Griffiths' watchful manager, Mr. H. Nugent, keeps a careful eye on everything, and able assistance is rendered him in front by Mr. J. H. Shotton. The orchestra, under Mr. Ward Bailey, contribute several appropriate numbers, which are much appreciated.

ALEXANDRA THEATRE, N.

The members of the Alexandra Theatre stock company are this week presenting The Clockmaker's Hat, in which, as Mr. Christopher Capstick, Mr. Mark Lester contributes yet another of his amusing impersonations. He is ably seconded by Mr. Henry J. Corner as Colonel Capstick, Mr. J. J. Daly appearing as Mr. Duplex, the clockmaker. Miss Nellie Dade scores heavily by her performance of the servant, Sally Smart, and claims a large share of the general success; Miss May Hallatt and Miss Frances Ruttledge as Jemima and Mrs. Capstick add to the attractiveness of the entertainment by the excellence of their performances. Miss Annie Dodge this week contributes the illustrated songs, and the two principal films being shown are An Episode of 1812 and St. Elmo.

MISS HORNIMAN'S COMPANY.

The Buxton dramatic season at the Opera House opened auspiciously on the 30th ult. with a representation of Mr. George Bernard Shaw's Candida, by Miss Horniman's company of the Gaiety Theatre, Manchester, under the direction of Mr. Edwin T. Heys. A capital house welcomed the play and greeted the representation with unlimited applause. The brilliant satire and exceptional acting certainly made a great impression. The play was cast with admirable judgment. Of the acting there can be nothing said but great praise. Mr. Ian Maclaren as the specimen of muscular Christianity, the Rev. James Mavor Morell, gave an exact embodiment of the part; and Miss Maire O'Neill as the sweetly sympathetic and womanly Candida was delightful. A subtle and picturesque performance was Mr. Esmé Percy's Eugene Marchbanks. The passion of the poetic lover was so delicately handled as to prevent its becoming at all ridiculous, yet the lighter side of the character was delightfully insinuated. The remainder of the cast were excellent. Miss Muriel Pratt played Prosperine Garnett with keen appreciation; a very amusing caricature of the father-in-law, Mr. Burgess, was presented by Mr. Francis Hope; and Mr. Frank Darch did his work well in the commonplace rôle of the Rev. Alexander Mill. To commemorate the commencement of the tour, Mr. Edwin T. Heys entertained the company, Miss Horniman, Judge Parry, Sir William Bailey, Mr. Iden Payne, and several other distinguished people to supper at the Crescent Hotel after the show.

Owing to the success of The Giddy Old Chantecler on Saturday night, it was repeated on Monday to a full house.

He is giving a special morning children's performance to-day (Saturday). Mollie Seymour is heard to advantage both as a vocalist and violinist; the Stewarts are clever in Scotch duologues; Carrie Ford pleases as a comedienne and dancer; smart comedy bar performances by Hugo and Smit win capital recognition; Vowles and Bryan, in a scena, Rose and Bud as comedy sketch artists, and Zoe and Bunnie, in song and dance, all entertain successfully. Mr. Martin Harvey, in deference to arrangements previously made, will bring his season at the Lyceum to an end on Saturday, which will, therefore, see the last performance of The Breed of the Treshams. The success of the play has been so decided that Mr. Harvey hopes at some future time to continue the run. On Aug. 22 Mr. Harvey starts on a lengthy provincial tour, playing in the course of the itinerary at Harrogate, Llandudno, Glasgow, Liverpool, Belfast, Dublin, Birmingham, and the Coronet.

Mr. H. B. Irving brought his present London season to a termination on Saturday evening, when he acted Lesurques and Dubosc in The Lyons Mail for the 166th time, at the Queen's Theatre. At the end of the play Mr. Irving announced that his next new production in London would be Mr. George Pleydell's dramatisation of Mr. A. E. W. Mason's popular novel, "Clementina," with Miss Stella Patrick Campbell in the title-rôle and himself as the soldier hero, Charles Wogan.

A hearty and cordial vote of thanks was accorded by acclamation to Mr. Martin Harvey for his strenuous efforts on behalf of the Fund and his kindness and courtesy in presiding at the sixty-fifth Festival, when, notwithstanding the regretful circumstances of the deaths of some of the chief supporters of the institution during the past year, it was confidently expected that the nett financial result of the function would be greater than that of the Festival of 1909. The committee appointed to consider the revision of the rules of the Association reported progress. A member was elected, and a candidate for election was nominated. The next meeting will be held on Tuesday, Aug. 2.

A phrase in our leader last week might easily convey the idea that the celebrated Vedrenne-Barker management of the Court Theatre ended in 1904. As a matter of fact, it began on Oct. 18, 1904, and ended on June 29, 1907, in which time 32 plays by 17 authors were produced, and 946 performances given.

Mr. Weedon Grossmith and Miss May Palfrey are giving their services at a matinée in aid of the Actors' Church Union, on Thursday, July 14, at the Shaftesbury Theatre. They will appear, with Mr. Wilfred Forster, in a new playlet, entitled How It's Done. Miss Palfrey on this occasion makes her re-appearance on a West End stage after an absence of nearly two years, and it is some considerble time since she and Mr. Weedon Grossmith were last seen acting together.

Others who have given their services are Miss Constance Collier, Mr. Henry Ainley, Mr. George Giddens, Mr. Weedon Grossmith, and Miss Pauline Chase. The promoters of the matinée performance of the new comedy His Lordship's Cure, by Dolf Wyllarde and Elliott Page, at the Apollo Theatre on Tuesday next, have decided to keep the price of reserved pit stalls at 3s. and gallery seats at 1s. Every penny raised by the matinée will be handed to Prince Francis of Teck. Amongst the patrons are the Marchioness of Donegall, Julia Marchioness of Tweeddale, the Countess of Bective, the Countess Drogheda, Dora Countess of Chesterfield, Lady Giroand, and Mr. and Mrs. Bland-Sutton, who are working with Mrs. E. Hatheway Turnbull to make the performance a financial success. The foundation-stone of the new building of the Royal Academy of Music in Marylebone-road will be laid, in the absence of the president, his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, by Lord Strathcona and Mount-Royal (one of the vice-presidents), at twelve o'clock on Thursday, the 14th inst. The Bishop of Kensington has consented to conduct a short service. The Royal Academy of Music students' choir will take part in the proceedings and sing an unaccompanied choral piece, "My soul would drink those echoes," written by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the principal, for the occasion; and the band of the Royal Engineers (by permission) will be in attendance, the bandmaster, Neville Flux, A.R.A.M., being an ex-student. The Royal Academy of Music has now only one more year to pass in Tenterden-street. The new school will be a very handsome building, with all the modern improvements, a large concert-hall, and three new organs.

Miss Edith Cole (Mrs. W. W. Kelly) made her first appearance on the stage of her husband's Liverpool theatre (Kelly's) last Monday week, when she appeared as the Duchesse de Verviers in The Broken Melody, supporting Mr. Auguste Von Biene. Record business was done throughout the week, people being regretfully turned away from all parts each evening. Miss Cole made a remarkable hit, and was received with enthusiasm.

A big move is being made in Liverpool to create interest in the institution of a repertory theatre, and Mr. Kelly, together with some of his brother managers, has offered to set aside a portion of the autumn season at Kelly's Theatre to repertory if he is given an adequate promise of support by responsible people. The matter is being taken up by the newly-formed Liverpool Playgoers' Society, an organisation which held its public inaugural meeting last week.

Mr. Kelly has made some capital engagements for the autumn season at his Liverpool theatre. They include the Castellano Opera Co., Miss Annie Hughes in Miss Tommy, The Hypocrites, The Girls of Gottenberg, The Dairymaids, &c. The autumn season will open on Monday, Aug. 1, with Mr. Lester Collingwood's When London Sleeps.

Messrs. Murray King and Clark's highly successful and artistic pantomime Dick Whittington will visit Exeter this year for a run of four weeks and then go on tour. At the Devonshire Park Theatre, Eastbourne, these well-known managers will produce at Christmas an entirely new and original version of The Babes in the Wood, which will be sumptuously mounted and dressed.

Mr. Edmund Gerson, the well-known American manager, who has conducted for many years past many first-class theatrical enterprises in New York, &c., has taken Terry's Theatre, and will present there, on Aug. 22, the well-known actress Miss May Robson, in The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary, which has run for three years without a break in the United States, and has been an immense success on the other side of the Atlantic. Miss Robson was for eighteen years under the management of Charles Frohman, and during that time she appeared in a long line of parts in the Frohman successes that ranged in character from ingénues to grande dames. "I tried to count the other day," said Miss Robson, "just how many different rôles I have played for Mr. Frohman. I got up to eighty-four when I stopped, because I could not think of any more." Miss Robson was the comedienne of that organisation, and was cast for all the feminine eccentric comedy characters. Her greater hits have been made in "slavey" parts, one of the most notable being that of Emma in Gloriana, and a similar one in Nerves. She also had congenial rôles in Lady Bountiful, Liberty Hall, Lord and Lady Algy, His Excellency the Governor, Bohemia, and other productions, and has appeared as well in several of Charles Frohman's musical comedies.

The Thomas Beecham autumn season of grand opera at Covent Garden commences on Oct. 1, and lasts until Dec. 31. Among many new and unfamiliar works will be included Eugen D'Albert's Tiefland, Mousseorgsky's Boris Godounow, Tschaikovsky's Pique Dame, and Saint-Saëns's Henry VIII. The proposed repertory embraces over twenty-eight operas, with eight new productions and some notable revivals, among them Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Colomba.

Mr. Cairns James, having entered eight of his pupils for the British Empire Shakespeare Society elocution examination, five were selected for the final examination, held at the Queen's Theatre by Mr. H. B. Irving, and he awarded the junior prize to Miss Mabel George, a pupil at Mr. Cairns James's school of musical and dramatic art, and the professional prize to Miss Maud Hartley, a pupil of Mr. Cairns James at the Guildhall School of Music.

Messrs. Murray King and Clark will produce next month and afterwards send on tour an entirely new romantic opera, entitled A Bedouin Beauty, written by Talbot Hughes and composed by Frederic Rosse. An elaborate production is being prepared.

That able and experienced actor, Mr. J. H. Barnes, is publishing his series of essays on the current drama, viz., (1) "The Attitude of the Public"; (2) "On Plays and Playwriting"; (3) "The Dramatic Press," at the convenient price of sixpence. Copies may be obtained at the offices of this paper.

Miss Nellie Farren Lonnen, daughter of the late E. J. Lonnen, and godchild of the late Nellie Farren, has been engaged by Messrs. Lyn Harding and Sydney Cooper to play the title-rôle in the autumn tour of the successful Playhouse piece, Tantalising Tommy, starting at the Prince's Theatre, Bristol, Aug. 1. Miss Lonnen has lately been playing for Miss Ellaline Terriss, at matinées, the part of the Dashing Duke with great success.

The Shakespeare Summer Season which Mr. F. R. Benson is organising at Stratford-on-Avon, will open on July 25 with The Winter's Tale, and the following evening the prize play, The Piper, will be produced with Miss Marion Terry in a leading part. Nine plays of Shakespeare will be presented, including the whole of Hamlet, which will be given in two consecutive performances, and the season, which will last three weeks, will include revivals of Masks and Faces and a concert by Mr. and Mrs. Albert Mallinson, of Dresden. The annual flower show and sports are fixed for Aug. 1.

"The Speckled Band," which has been very successful at the Adelphi Theatre, will be moved to the Globe on Monday, Aug. 8, the cast remaining the same as at the Adelphi. A provincial company with the thrilling drama will start its tour at Blackpool on July 25, Mr. C. W. Somerset playing Dr. Rylott; and in another company which will visit the suburbs Mr. Bassett Roe will be the murderous medico, Mr. O. P. Heggie Sherlock Holmes, and Miss Mary Forbes Enid. Two country tours have also been booked for The House of Temperley, the one beginning at Blackpool on Aug. 15, and the other at Lowestoft on the 22nd.

Miss Horniman took her M.A. degree in the Whitworth Hall, at Manchester University, last Saturday. The Vice-Chancellor (Sir Alfred Hopkinson) presided, and Professor Conway, in presenting Miss Horniman for the degree, said:—"I have now to present to you, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, Miss Ann Horniman, who has had the boldness to render a service to our national culture which no masculine mind had dared to attempt. It is the privilege of a university whose distinctions are not limited by sex to express to her the gratitude of a community which can never have too many protectors from its own Philistine instincts. Miss Horniman has converted us from the old system of theatre management to her own more excellent way, and she has added something to the gaiety of nations by her control of the Abbey of Dublin and by her maintenance of the Gaiety of Manchester. Relinquishing sternly the financial glories and the intellectual stagnation associated with 'the long run,' so dear to the male manager, she has established once more in England a company of actors fit and willing to present a succession of plays, a company of whom, like Cleopatra, we may almost say that 'age cannot wither them, nor custom stale their infinite variety.' And she has also established a theatre in which lovers of the stage may find a play that is literary as well as dramatic, plays that cannot merely be acted but are the artistic expression of real and independent thought."

Mr. Francis Laidler, the popular proprietor of the Theatre Royal, Leeds, together with his able lieutenant, Mr. Nathaniel Hepworth, devoted the proceeds of the Tuesday afternoon matinée to the aid of the sufferers in the recent sad accident at Roundhay Park, Leeds, where several people lost their lives. The entertainment was under the patronage of the Lord Mayor of Leeds, and the sum of £46 was realisedfia very welcome addition to the fund which is being raised.

The run of Glass Houses at the Globe Theatre will be temporarily suspended about the end of this month in order that Miss Violet Vanbrugh and Mr. Arthur Bourchier, who badly need a holiday, may take one. This is only judicious, in view of Miss Vanbrugh's important undertaking of the part of Queen Katherine in Sir Herbert Tree's Henry VIII. production at His Majesty's.

Miss Gertrude Boswell, the wife of Mr. George H. Smith, has returned to London after a brief visit to Australia. She will be in town for some time on business.

Miss Gertrude Kingston's "Little Theatre" will be opened to the public in October. There will be seats for about 300, and though the house itself is comparatively small, the stage is as wide as that of St. James's and as deep as that of the Comedy. There will be no gallery or pit; the whole being constructed on one floor, rising from the stage, to a set of private boxes at the back.

Miss Maire O'Neill, the young Irish actress who has made such a favourable impression during the visits of the Abbey Theatre, Dublin, company, to London, made her first appearance with an English company on the 30th ult., when Bernard Shaw's Candida was put on at the Opera House, Buxton, by Mr. Edwin T. Heys's company. Miss O'Neill played with a charm and grace that riveted attention, her comeliness and her musical voice contributing to an eloquent rendering of Bernard Shaw's most womanly heroine. Mr. Esme Percy played Marchbanks with great tact and skill, and Mr. Ian Maclaren was excellent as Morell. There was great enthusiasm at the close of the performance.

Afterwards, Mr. Edwin T. Heys, who is Miss Horniman's business-manager at the Gaiety Theatre, Manchester, entertained his company and some of his audience to supper at the Crescent Hotel. The guests included Judge Parry, Miss Horniman, Councillor Butterworth, Mr. B. Iden Payne (who produced the play), and Mr. Stafford Dawson (the stage manager). The occasion was a thoroughly enjoyable and memorable one.

The third performance of the Masque of Shakespeare took place as arranged at Knole on Saturday afternoon, by kind permission of Lord and Lady Sackville. It was played in a lovely glade surrounded with old beech trees in the Old Park, and was attended by a large number of people, many motoring down from town. The cast was almost the same as before, but Miss Shelley took the part of Peg Woffington instead of the Hon. Irene Lawley, who was unable to be present. Lady Eileen Wellesley again made a most piquant Kitty Clive, and the dance by Miss Barbara Jekyll as Titania attended by her fairies, was received with enthusiasm. Although the success of the Masque was much curtailed by the bad weather, it is hoped that a substantial sum in aid of the movement will be the result of the three performances.

Though a sound and well established success at the Duke of York's Theatre, The Dawn of a To-morrow must perforce be withdrawn within the next few weeks, to enable Miss Gertrude Elliott to carry out her antecedent engagement to appear in America in September. Meantime Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's remarkable drama (produced in London at a time when the nation was newly plunged into mourning, and when, moreover, its original and elaborate stock of American scenery lay at the bottom of the sea in the foundered Minnehaha) has, by its sheer vitality and the splendid efficiency of its cast, quite won the hearts of London playgoers.

Professor Gilbert Murray, the dramatist, who occupies the Greek Chair in the University of Oxford, and whose young daughter is about to publish a novel under the title of "The Leading Note," is a son of Sir Terence Murray, an early Irish settler in Australia, who rose to distinction in the public life of New South Wales, the parent State of the Commonwealth. Sir Terence also distinguished himself by running down and capturing a number of bushranging desperadoes.

Mr. Ellis J. Preston, who has just concluded a successful stock season for Messrs. Moss and Stoll at Broadway Theatre, New Cross, as producer and stage-manager, was highly complimented on the excellent manner in which he directed affairs behind the curtain. He takes this opportunity of thanking the ladies and gentlemen of the company who worked so conscientiously during the five weeks. Mr. and Mrs. Preston (Miss Amy Venimore) have been engaged by Messrs. Walter and Fred Melville for their autumn tour of The Fighting Chance, Mr. Preston as manager.

"The Little Damozel," after a short but well-earned holiday, makes her reappearance on Monday at Douglas, where Mr. Mark Blow and Miss Ida Molesworth's company opens at the Gaiety Theatre a tour of the principal seaside and No. 1 towns. The company, which is a strong one, includes Miss Emilie Polini as Julie Alardy and Mr. Alick Chumley as Recklaw Poole.

Mr. H. E. Sawyer, late manager of the Hippodrome, Peckham, has been appointed acting manager of the Opera House, Jersey, vice Mr. Stanley Hope, who goes in the capacity of manager to Mr. Oswald Stoll's theatre at Croydon.

Miss Freear is fulfilling a special engagement with Mr. Frederick Mantell this week at Felixstowe—her last appearance in England prior to her South African tour. She met with a big reception on Monday evening.

Miss Lydia Donovan, who has just returned to town, having concluded a starring engagement with Mr. John Clyde, was the recipient of several gifts last week on the occasion of her benefit performance at the King's Theatre, Edinburgh, among others being a magnificent basket of roses presented to her by the directors of the theatre.

It is now announced that a marriage took place on Friday, Aug. 6, 1909, at St. Clement Dane's, Strand, between Francis Geoffrey Pearson, third and youngest son of Sir Weetman and Lady Pearson, and Miss Ethel Lewis, of the D'Oyly Carte company. Miss E. Lewis had played both at the Savoy and on tour with the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company. In the Pirates of Penzance she was one of the principal daughters, and in Iolanthe one of the three fairies in attendance upon the Queen. On tour she appeared as Josephine in H.M.S. Pinafore. She had a powerful voice. On her marriage with Mr. Francis Pearson she gave up her professional career. The wedding was very quiet, and only the most intimate friends of the bride were aware of it. Mr. Francis Pearson was barely eighteen years of age at the time, having been born on Aug. 23, 1891.

We understand Messrs. Murray King and Clark (the popular managers of the Devonshire Park Theatre, Eastbourne) are taking over the Lyceum Theatre, Ipswich, on a twenty-one years' lease. Ipswich is a large town, and with experienced managers like these the house should do really well.

Dr. F. J. Furnivall, who passed away at a ripe old age last Saturday at his house at Primrose Hill, was the founder of the New Shakespeare Society, and the author of an important work on the text of Shakespeare; the Introduction to the Leopold and Royal Shakespeares; and the Introduction to the Thirty-nine Volumes of the Century Shakespeare. He also edited the Old Spelling Shakespeare with F. W. Clarke. Mr. Furnivall was an enthusiast at boating, and the promoter of a rowing club for working girls.

The funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon. The remains were removed from deceased's residence, St. George's-square, Primrose Hill, to the Golder's-green Crematorium. There was no service, but an organ recital was given by Mr. Philip Cooke. Dr. Percy Furnivall, son of the deceased, was the chief mourner, and amongst others present were Sir Edward Clarke, Mr. G. H. Radford, M.P., Mr. A. J. Mundella, Mr. H. Frank Heath (of the Board of Education), Mr. Sidney Lee and Mr. F. S. Boas (representing the English Association), Dr. G. F. Warner, Mr. Barclay Squire, and Mr. A. W. Pollard (of the British Museum), Mr. A. G. Snelgrove (hon. treasurer) and Mr. C. T. Hunt (hon. secretary of the London Shakespeare League), Mr. R. J. Reynolds (hon. secretary of the Shakespeare Society), Dr. Henry Bradley (of the Oxford Dictionary), and Mr. Charles Cannan (secretary of delegates Oxford University Press).

At a meeting on the 1st inst. at the Bear's Paw Restaurant, Liverpool, of the recently-formed Liverpool Playgoers' Society, Mr. B. Iden Payne, the part director of the Manchester Gaiety Theatre, in an address on "The Dramatic Renascence," took exception to the description "new drama" as applied to the works of promising modern playwrights. It was no more new than any other art which was healthy and vital and was an expression of real life, and it should be rather called "a renascence of sincere drama." They were passing away from the stage of mechanical tricks and devices of the merely commercial theatre into a more full expression of dramatic life.

Mr. Payne touched upon the more recent development of the touring system and the "long run," which he objected to on the ground that they converted the actor into a machine. Nobody, he said, could act one part for 3,000 or 4,000 nights. Actors and actresses who did that sort of thing became artistically insane. The public were having their dramatic fare given them by artistic lunatics. That was a serious thing, because primarily it was turning the public into lunatics. The audiences they met nowadays were mad. It was because they were lunatics that they accepted the modern plays.

Enlarging upon the need for the repertory theatre, the speaker complained that the provinces were entirely dependent for their dramatic fare on the crumbs that fell from the metropolitan table. That was a thing which they must not tolerate. The advantages of a repertory theatre included the training of actors and actresses and the encouragement of dramatists. He appealed for a living art in their midst—above all, for the dramatic art, which was the one art that was universal.

Mr. W. P. Irving (hon. secretary of the Leeds Playgoers' Society) outlined the work of the Leeds Society, and showed how, both on its own initiative and in co-operation with societies in other towns, many advantages had been conferred upon the playgoing community. The chairman (Professor C. H. Reilly, M.A.) announced that both Mr. Arthur Lawrence and Mr. W. W. Kelly had offered to place their theatres at the service of the society for the presentation of plays by Mr. Shaw, Mr. Galsworthy, and others.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell has commissioned Mr. W. B. Yeats to write a play for her in which she will appear as an actress whose conduct in the course of a revolution has an important influence on the country to which she belongs. The piece is a fantastic comedy, written in verse, with a good deal of rhyme.

Mr. George O. Starr, general-manager of the Crystal Palace, has received the following letter from Queen Alexandra, in recognition of the wreaths sent by the Palace Company and Schools: "Buckingham Palace, July 5, 1910.—I wish to express my heartfelt thanks to all the kind donors of the beautiful wreaths and flowers which were sent as tokens of affection in memory of our beloved King.—(Signed) Alexandra."

Mr. Hardy has bought for Mr. Henry de Vries a new four-act play by Messrs. E. W. Hornung and Frederick Fenn. It is a story of criminal life in London, and in it, of course, Mr. De Vries will impersonate various characters.

Mr. Stanley Cooke will reopen the Strand Theatre on Sept. 10 with A. S. du Souchet's farce, in three acts, entitled The Man from Mexico, which had its first production at the Coronet Theatre in the November of 1908, with Mr. Cooke as Benjamin Fitzhugh. The farce has had a very long run in America.

Mr. Frohman has secured for Miss Violet Vanbrugh a new play entitled The Impostor, by Mr. Michael Morton and Mr. Leonard Merrick. The piece is in three acts, and deals with certain phases of English life.

Mr. Lewis Waller will commence his provincial tour at Birmingham on Monday, Aug. 29, when he will produce a new play, by Mr. Henry Hamilton and Mr. Rafael Sabatini, called Bardeleys the Magnificent, dealing with the Louis XIII. period. The monarch will be in evidence, and Mr. Waller will enact one of his nobles. Miss Madge Titheradge will sustain the leading female part, and Mr. William Haviland will have a prominent and important rôle. The drama will be seen in London in January.

The late Mr. Hermann Vezin's library will be sold by auction at Puttick and Simpson's on Thursday, July 14. It includes a number of acting editions of plays, and books relating to the drama.

Amongst the numerous local committees which have been formed throughout the country to organise support for the Shakespeare Memorial National Theatre movement the Chelsea Committee is one of the first to commence work for the cause. On July 14, at 4.30 p.m., an open-air performance of The Two Gentlemen of Verona will be given, in the grounds of St. Mark's College, Chelsea, for the benefit of the local fund. Mrs. Carl Leyel, who is organising the effort, has got together an excellent company, who are kindly giving their services. Miss Ellen O'Malley will play Silvia and Miss Thyrza Norman Julia. Mr. Nigel Playfair will appear as Launce, and Mr. H. R. Hignett and Mr. Athol Stewart as Valentine and Proteus. Arrangements have been made to hold the performance indoors at St. Mark's College, in case of inclement weather.

Mr. Frank B. O'Neill, the esteemed business-manager for Mr. Martin Harvey, is to be married on the 18th inst. to Miss Mary Vincent (Miss Mary Gray). Mr. O'Neill's many friends, with all of whom it is practically impossible to communicate, will hasten to congratulate him.

An action for breach of contract was brought at the Monmouth Assizes on the 29th ult., by Mr. Stanley Carlton against Messrs. E. and H. Tilney, proprietors of theatres in Abertillery and Ebbw Vale, for damages for alleged breach of contract in not allowing the plaintiff to carry out a contract to perform A Girl's Repentance. The plaintiff claimed the amount of salaries paid to the artists and money for printing; and the defendants counter-claimed with respect to the loss they are alleged to have suffered in consequence of the performance being inefficient.

The defendants contracted to provide a theatre for plaintiff's company to perform A Girl's Repentance during the week following Jan. 31, 1910. From Jan. 10 to Jan. 17 the plaintiff's company performed Her Life in London at Messrs. Tilney's theatre at Ebbw Vale, and then the next week at Abertillery. The defendants stopped the company playing A Girl's Repentance at Abertillery on the grounds that the company were not efficient; that the ladies' dresses were poor and did not suit them; and that the ladies were amateurish and that certain characters were duplicated.

Mr. Stanley Carlton said no complaint was made as to the inefficiency of the company until he received a letter from Messrs. Tilney's solicitor. He played three weeks in defendants' theatres, and his share of the gross takings were settled on the Saturday nights after the show. At these settlements no suggestion was made that he had carried out the contract badly. He would have played at Abertillery on the 31st had he been allowed, but the other company's printing was out. He was willing to cancel the engagement to oblige Mr. Tilney and accept another date, providing that the salaries of the company were paid.

Mr. Ernest Tilney said the performance of Her Life in London at Abertillery was below the standard. The receipts were poor, although it was the best time of the year. The morning after the performance of A Girl's Repentance he told Mr. Carlton that the "show" would not suit him at Abertillery. He offered plaintiff £10 towards expenses if the contract was cancelled.

Other evidence having been given, Mr. Justice Lawrance said the question underlying the whole thing was whether defendants were entitled to put an end to the contract owing to the incompetency of the company. He pointed out that the plaintiff's circular said he had twenty recognised artists. However, there were only eleven on the stage. There were also two ladies who could not be heard, and one who suffered from stage fright. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff with £30 damages

Mr. Walter Maxwell's Mr. Preedy and the Countess will embark next week at the Theatre Royal, Margate, upon a long tour of the principal theatres in the kingdom.

Mr. Hugh Fleming, completely recovered by a lengthened rest at Brighton from the effects of an operation upon the eyes he underwent some time ago in Brussels, has been secured by Mr. Walter Maxwell as advance manager for his Mr. Preedy and the Countess tour.

Miss Elizabeth Firth returns to Daly's Theatre this evening to take up the part of Olga in The Dollar Princess, replacing Miss Emmy Wehlen, who goes on tour with Mr. George Edwardes' principal company in the early autumn.

Messrs. Chappell and Co., Ltd., are sending out on Monday, for a long theatre tour, that clever company of entertainers from the Queen's Hall, "The Grotesques." A few of the towns to be visited are Hastings, Yarmouth, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dundee, Newcastle, etc., etc. The entertainment is of the best, and should prove one of the principal attractions of the autumn season.

Mr. Norman V. Norman, accompanied by Miss Beatrice Wilson, played a special week's engagement at the Gaiety Theatre, Douglas. Neither Mr. Norman nor Miss Wilson had appeared in Douglas for some years past, but were received with the greatest enthusiasm. On the Monday the "House Full" boards were put out shortly after the performance commenced.

"A Woman of Two Lives," a drama by Mr. Charles Darrell, will be produced by Miss Hilda Beverley at the Junction Theatre, Manchester, on July 18.

At the Queen's Theatre, Shaftesbury-avenue (by kind permission of Mr. H. B. Irving), on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons, July 26 and 28, Miss Clara Alexander will give two musical and dramatic matinées in aid of West Ham Hospital. The chief novelties will be two short plays by Kate Lyon, entitled Peace (an episode of the American Civil War) and The Rose (a story of Italian peasant life), in which Miss Alexander will appear. They will be "produced" by Mr. Norman Trevor of the Globe Theatre, who will act the rôle of a Confederate officer in the first playlet. Among the variety turns who have promised to assist will be Miss Cecilia Loftus, Miss Lydia Kyasht, Miss Constance Collier, Miss Florence Smithson, Miss Clara Evelyn, Miss Sybil Arundale, Miss Christine Hawkes (accordion), Miss Marta Cunningham, Mr. Guy Standing, Mr. C. H. Workman, Mr. Alfred Lester, Mr. Hugh Peyton, and Mr. Gordon Cleather. The accompanist will be Miss Lucie Gerrard, L.R.A.M., and programmes will be sold by ladies from The Arcadians and The Girl in the Train companies.

The Imperial Copyright Conference, which was summoned to discuss the revised International Copyright Convention of Berlin and to settle the lines on which it would be possible to amend the Copyright Law of the Empire, has now held its final meeting. Llewellyn Smith, Permanent Secretary; Mr. G. R. Askwith, K.C., and Mr. W. Temple Franks, representing the Board of Trade; Mr. H. W. Just, Secretary to the Imperial Conference, representing the Colonial Office; Mr. A. Law, representing the Foreign Office; Sir Thomas Raleigh, member of the Council of India, representing the India Office; and Mr. F. F. Liddell, of the office of the Parliamentary Council. The representatives of the self-governing dominions were: The Hon. Sydney Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, accompanied by Mr. P. E. Ritchie (Dominion of Canada), Lord Tennyson (Commonwealth of Australia), the Hon. Sir W. Hall Jones (Dominion of New Zealand), the Hon. Sir R. Solomon, K.C. (Union of South Africa), and the Hon. Sir E. Morris, K.C. (Newfoundland). Mr. A. B. Keith, of the Colonial Office, and Mr T. W. Phillips, of the Board of Trade, acted as joint secretaries of the Conference. A series of resolutions were passed dealing with the various subjects within the scope of the Conference.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

A New Title.

"DURING the hearing of the theatrical case at the Monmouth Assizes last week," remarks the Cardiff Western Mail, "the interesting admission was made that the same play had been staged at various times under three different titles. The circumstance reminds a hills' correspondent of the subterfuge resorted to some years ago at a portable theatre which was pitched for a while in the neighbourhood. Hamlet had been selected for representation on a certain night, but the proprietor, evidently believing that some other name would prove more attractive to the unsophisticated in matters dramatic, and so yield a corresponding increase in the pay-box takings, 'billed' Shakespeare's tragedy under the title, How the Stepfather was Paid Out."

A Haunted House.

A GREAT many people, nearly all connected with the stage, firmly believe that the Princess Theatre, Melbourne, is haunted. Others who laugh at the idea of ghosts admit that an apparition, inexplicable and curious, does appear in the O.P. side of the dress circle, and is there visible for hours, though intangible and impalpable. The evidence available seems to indicate that a distinct abnormal something, whether it be a strange shadow, an extraordinary reflection, or an optical illusion of some other kind has been seen and watched by various people during the last few years.

THIS ghost first made its appearance about five years ago, having been discovered by a fireman on duty in the theatre. Those who believe in ghosts—and there are many, especially among stagefolk, who are notoriously superstititious—recall the case of the Italian baritone. He was playing Mephistopheles in Faust in the Princess Theatre about twenty-five years ago. One night he drew Faust down the glowing red trap into Hades, and just as he reached the floor below the stage he groaned and collapsed dead. The superstitious declare that it is his ghost which haunts the theatre still, but the fireman has seen a portrait of the baritone, and says he is not a bit like the dress circle ghost.

A FAMOUS actress suspects that it may be the ghost of her father, who worked in the theatre for many years, and used often to stand with his back to the identical pillar where the ghost is now seen, but the fireman has assured her that it is not he. Dozens of actors and actresses have sat through the small hours on the stage in front of the curtain gazing for hours across the empty blackness at the point where the ghost appears. Most of them have watched in vain, but many have seen it. The last who saw the apparition were an actor and his wife. They and the fireman all saw it at the same time. The lady promptly fainted, and investigations had to be postponed till she recovered. By that time the ghost had vanished. The ghost is always seen in the same spot, and that is directly beneath the bunch of heavily glassed electric lamps, the third bunch up from the stage on the left-hand side of the circle.

Had to be Seen to.

"No more popular figure existed in the old Theatre Royal, Dublin, than Levy, the conductor," says Mr. Harry Furniss in an article on "Some Unrehearsed Stage Effects." "He was the father of some very celebrated musicians—one of them was Levy, the cornet-player, who made such a sensation with his cornet and his diamond rings in the Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden, under Rivière's direction, twenty-five years ago. Old Levy had a very large family ('Paganini redivivus' was another of his famous sons), and a story is told that when conducting the overture to an opera in the Theatre Royal, a boy jumped up from under the stage and said:—'Misther Levy! Misther Levy! Your woive has just had a babby!' 'The Lord be praised for all His mercies!' said the conductor, keeping the bâton going.

"In a few seconds the boy again appeared. 'Misther Levy! Misther Levy!' 'Well, boy, is anything wrong?' 'Missis Levy has had another babby, sor!' 'Thank Heaven! All's well!' And the bâton waved with greater vigour, working up the orchestra to a tremendous flourish.

"Once more he was disturbed by the same messenger. 'Misther Levy! Misther Levy!' 'Git out, boy! What's the matter now?' 'Begorrah, there's another! As y' call 'em trins!' The conductor rose and, putting down his bâton, said:—'Gintlemen, it's toime I wint home and put a stop to this!'

Supporting Foli.

"The great baritone, Signor Foli, when singing in grand opera in his native city, Cork, had to sing one of his songs from a stage balcony. The arrangements were not very perfect, and the manager, fearing the carpenter had not made the balcony strong enough to sustain the weight of the big man, told off two assistants to hold it up from beneath. The lengthy Signor was only half through his song when one man said to the other:—'Be jabers, Moike, this Oitalian is moighty heavy!' 'Let's dhrop him, Pat; he's only an Oitalian, afther all!' Voice from the Signor above: 'Will ye, ye divils, will ye?' 'Tare-an'-'ounds! Pat, but he's an Oirishman; hould him up for the loife of yez!'

A Pince-nez Performance.

"One of the most popular authors of the present day began life, like so many authors, as an actor. 'The worst actor that ever trod the boards,' he said to me a few days ago. 'I could never recollect my part or my "business," and without my glasses I am as blind as a bat. My first chance was in a travelling company as the lift attendant in Our Flat, and I walked on the first night with them on. This caused the ire of the principal actor and manager to rise. "Whoever saw a liftman in pince-nez?" "All right," I replied. "I'll take them off to-morrow night, but I will not answer for the consequences." The next evening I entered, and the first thing I did was to knock over a table and fall into a seat I didn't see. When I went off there stood the actor-manager ready to kill me. "You have spoilt all my business," he said. "I was to knock over that table, you fool, and fall into that chair. The performance is ruined." ' And so was my friend's career as an actor."

Opera in English.

MR. DAVID BISPHAM in the "Century Magazine" for July, says that it would be better if operas were sung in English in this country and the United States, and commends the action of the Kaiser in commanding that opera in Germany must be sung in the national language. "The reason that every language but our own is used," he says, "is simply that our artists will not, and foreign artists cannot, sing in English; or vice versa, if it pleases either party better. The Italians in the gallery want to know what their idol on the stage is singing about, and the German declines to go to hear what he cannot understand. Why should not we? The fact is that so-called 'grand opera' is the fashion; and, as with many fashions, there is little sense in some phases of it. America is opera mad, and anything that is good is patronised even if it be not understood."

We shall be obliged if our readers will send us any amusing anecdotes they may hear, or accounts of any quaint incidents they may witness while acting or rehearsing.

DEATH OF CAPTAIN MARSHALL.

We regret to record the death from lung trouble and other complaints on Friday afternoon, July 1, at a nursing home in Paddington—where he had moved after a stay at Cannes—of Captain Robert Marshall, the author of so many amusing and delightful plays. Captain Marshall was born in Edinburgh in 1863. He was the son of Mr. James Marshall, a local J.P., and was educated at St. Andrews and the Edinburgh University. As a young man he was an active amateur actor, but eventually he enlisted as a private in the Highland Light Infantry. He was thence transferred to the Duke of Wellington's Regiment, and served for some years with it in the West Indies, a little piece of his entitled The Subaltern, being performed by a company of amateurs at Bermuda. At Cape Town he held a staff appointment, and in Natal he acted as aide-de-camp to the Governor, Sir Walter Hely-Hutchinson. There he wrote his first important play, His Excellency the Governor, which a lady in England sent to Mr. Arthur Chudleigh, by whom it was accepted and produced at the Court Theatre on June 11, 1898. Captain Marshall's first London production, however, was a curtain-raiser, The Shades of Night, which was produced in 1896 at the Lyceum, under the joint management of Mr. Forbes-Robertson and Mr. Frederick Harrison. His next piece, The Broad Road, was presented at Terry's on Nov. 5, 1898, with less success; but Captain Marshall fully redeemed his reputation in A Royal Family and The Second in Command. In the latter, which was performed at the Haymarket in 1900, Mr. Cyril Maude made a palpable hit as Binks. Captain Marshall never did anything better than this clever and interesting piece, and his succeeding efforts, The Duke of Killiecrankie, The Lady of Leeds, and The Alabaster Staircase, were distinctly inferior. The last-named piece, which was done at the Comedy in 1906, was a decided failure, and it is said that Captain Marshall never recovered from the disappointment. In spite of a cast which included Sir John Hare, Miss Lottie Venne, and Miss Gertrude Kingston, the play failed to attract, possibly owing to the subject—the intractable one of politics, a Cabinet Council being one of the incidents. The following is a list of Captain Marshall's plays:—Shades of Night, Lyceum, 1896; His Excellency the Governor, The Broad Road, Terry's, autumn, 1898; A Royal Family, Court, 1899; The Noble Lord, 1900; The Second in Command, Haymarket, 1900; There's Many a Slip, 1902; The Unforeseen, Haymarket, 1902; The Haunted Major, 1902; The Duke of Killiecrankie, Criterion, 1904; Everybody's Secret, Haymarket, 1904; The Lady of Leeds, Wyndham's, 1905; The Alabaster Staircase, Comedy, 1906; The Outsider (with Mayne Lindsay), Royal, Manchester, 1908.

Captain Marshall's military career was a very creditable one. He was Lieutenant in the Duke of Wellington's Regiment, already mentioned, became Captain in 1895, and retired in 1898. His plays disclosed in their author an agreeable lightness of touch and a peculiar knowledge of military and official life. His Excellency the Governor, with its amusing, yet realistic depiction of official life in a colony, was in the same key of pleasant ridicule of pomp and "pride of place" as A Royal Family, one of the cleverest comedies of kingship ever written, never degenerating into caricature, and marked by great polish and brightness. The Second in Command was in a more serious and sentimental vein, and was generally considered to be the best thing Captain Marshall ever wrote. It is probable that his gradually failing health had much to do with the comparative feebleness of his later productions. Lately he had been obliged to spend most of the winter months abroad, but this could only postpone the inevitable end of one of the cleverest, most humorous, and most amiable authors who ever wrote for the London stage.

The funeral took place in the Grange Cemetery, Edinburgh, on Tuesday. A service was conducted in the house, 49, Gilmour-road, by the Rev. Dr. Bruce B. Begg, Abbotshall, Kirkcaldy, and the Rev. Mr. Minty, Cannes. At the graveside prayer was offered up by the Rev. George Christie. Among those who sent wreaths were Sir Squire Bancroft, Sir John and Lady Hare, Sir Arthur Pinero, Lord Burnham, the Earl of Rosslyn, Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Maude, the general staff of the Playhouse, Mr. Weedon Grossmith, Mr. and Mrs. Forbes Robertson, Mr. Arthur Chudleigh, and the Dramatists' Club.

THE GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Two organ solos were included in the programme of the students' recital on Thursday evening, June 30, Mr. John Cawley playing Dr. Harwood's "Pæan" with excellent results, and Mr. George A. Allbright proving himself a clever executant in Dubois's very effective Toccata in G. Miss Edith Nance sang "She wandered down," Clay's once popular song; and Mr. Donald Griggs was heard in "Pilgrim's song" (Tschaikowsky), which did not, however, suit the vocalist. Bishop's famous old song, "Should he upbraid" was gracefully sung by Miss Jessie Booth; and in her piano solo Miss Elizabeth Weiss neatly executed Moszkowski's "Tarantelle." Another clever pianist was Miss Myfanwy Ridge, who played Sinding's "Prelude"; Mr. W. J. West's 'cello solo of "Romance" (Duport) was much applauded; while "Mountain Lovers" was capitally sung by Mr. W. Vawdrey Ley. Miss Marie J. Cox (a pupil of Mr. Cairns James) gave a lively recitation of Burnand's "Rather at Sea"; and the trio "The harp in the air," from Maritana, sung by the Misses Gillespie and Goodwin, proved a very interesting feature in the concert. Miss Marjorie Russell sang "I come to you," by Noel Johnson, with good tone and expression; and Miss Winnie Gollancz had a very hearty recall for her excellent performance of Schumann's Nachstück in F for piano. Miss Hyman was the accompanist; and the recital concluded with an effective recitation, "The Old Stage Queen" (Ella Wheeler Wilcox), by Miss Irene Jones, pupil of Professor Paul Berton.

THE Sheffield Stage Plays Committee at their meeting, on Tuesday afternoon, had before them a letter from Mrs. Wycliffe Wilson, the wife of a prominent Sheffield Liberal ex-alderman, and city magistrate, complaining of the title of the play Mockery of Marriage. She contended that if the play answered to the title it was likely to encourage young people not to marry and to live in immorality. An alderman said his experience was that such plays did not set up immorality as something to be copied, but to be avoided. The committee decided to reply to the letter that they had no power to act.

MR. JUSTICE SWINFEN-EADY in the Companies' Winding-up Court on Tuesday had again before him the petition by H. Gittelsohn and others for the compulsory winding up of the Cambrian Theatres (Limited). The Hon. C. E. Macnaghten, K.C., who, with Mr. Sims, appeared in support of the petition, said that it had been presented by two shareholders who had fifty £1 shares each, and it was supported by two creditors. The company had a short, but not very prosperous, though certainly a very irregular, career. Mr. Russell, K.C. (with him Mr. Simmons), for the company and creditors and shareholders opposing, said that out of the independent shareholders, who numbered about one hundred, he thought fifty were in favour of a compulsory order, and under these circumstances he did not oppose the order the petitioners were asking for. His lordship accordingly made the usual compulsory order.

"BRITANNIA'S MUSTER."

HOW IT WAS DRESSED.
A CHAT WITH MR. W. CLARKSON.

The splendid success of the great spectacle "Britannia's Muster," which really forms the most picturesque portion of the Royal Naval and Military Tournament at Olympia must be due to its efficient dressing. No spectacular show is possible without accurate local colour, however clever the marshalling. In this instance Mr. William Clarkson, the famous perruquier and costumier, must be awarded special honours. Thanks to a natural aptitude for tackling gigantic things, he has given us one of the most brilliantly dressed pageants ever seen.

"'Difficult' you say," said Mr. Clarkson, when amazement was expressed at the complexity of uniforms required to dress over 500 soldiers of different grades and regiments. "Well, it is. But the work is ever so much easier if you look at it in the brightest light. Some people fail in their efforts for the reason that, having taken something gigantic on, they are either afraid to execute it or execute it badly for want of confidence. Believe me, the order for dressing, wigging, and supplying arms and accoutrements for 'Britannia's Muster' I received but fourteen days before production. That was to clothe over 500 men, provide five emblematical cars, and scenery, to say nothing of detail props. Then the wigs and beards—not two alike—and head-dresses. Still, it was done—and the public says 'well done,' as witness the tremendous financial success."

"I see you have had to provide uniforms for fifty-seven Indian and Colonial regiments. Where did you get them in so short a time?"

"Get them? Why, made them! And I'll guarantee every one correct in detail. They average five of each—an officer and four men. Do you know that even the buttons are the correct thing: each has the distinctive regimental crest upon it. Nothing has been omitted. But now let me tell you something. I dare say some of these regiments you have never heard of. They represent South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, Canada, and India. Don't ask me how many tailors, braiders, and so on worked night and day, I haven't time to count them. Suffice to say the whole lot entailed a preliminary expenditure of over £4,000 on my part. Not that is is the biggest of its kind I have done; far from it. I'll tell you something else presently. Do you know this is the seventeenth year in succession I have had the sole handling of the picturesque side of the Tournaments? Yes," said the genial Clarkson, "and in that time I must have provided 25,000 or 30,000 costumes and wigs to adorn Tommy Atkins. Ah, by the way, don't the soldiers enjoy being 'mummers,' and don't they take care of the props! I'm rather pleased to supply the wigs and whiskers—they positively get 'drilled' with military precision, and when they come home they almost know their own places." So says Clarkson.

"I have twelve men and four women at Olympia on my staff, and they do not get much rest I can assure you. Not that Tommy is helpless; but I like everything done, down to the finest point, accurately. Every soldier must pass muster before going on, Make-up? Yes, that's quite a big item. Soap, towels, spirit gum, &c.—oh, it goes down a hundredweight at a time."

"Now tell me, Mr. Clarkson. There has been a lot of talk about your beautiful Britannia who is supposed never to smile. Why shouldn't Britannia smile and enjoy her position?"

"Well, you see, it is like this. I've had some of this smiling business, and its all very well; but it eventually resolves itself into a smile that will come off, and the absurdity of it spoils the show. Out of 190 applicants I selected Miss Tony Lawrence for Britannia, but only on one condition—no smile in the arena. Ah, this is funny! Perhaps you are aware that I advertised for a woman to represent Britannia, and to bring own costume, etc. Do you know that 75 per cent. of them turned up made up almost like the late Queen Victoria; and most striking some of them were."

"Now about the cars. Did you make them all at Wardour-street?"

"No; at Olympia. They cost about £200 each. They represent 'Britannia,' with John Bull driving; 'Africa,' emblematical of peace and industry; 'Canada,' with its polar iciness and its growing commerce; 'Australia,' the golden colony; &c. Not the least attractive number in the Tournament is the tent-pegging by Arabs, all of whom are the British Army's finest horsemen—the pick of the Army. Their picturesque Moorish costumes are by me, consisting of the real 'rig-out,' including the 'sandbags'—stockings.

"I have received a most gratifying letter from Colonel George Nugent, the honorary secretary of the Royal Naval and Military Tournament, in which he says:—'Dear Mr. Clarkson,—I am much obliged for all your work in "Britannia's Muster." The dresses, makes-up, and cars could not have been better, and last, but by no means least, the lady you engaged to play Britannia (Miss Lawrence) was charming, and played her part most gracefully. The great success of the whole Pageant is due in no small measure to you.'

"Now, just a word more. I have dressed the whole of the Toronto Semi-Centennial Pageant at Toronto, sending over 1,500 costumes—all made in forty-eight days—to the Armouries for Sir Henry M. Pellatt. There was a ton of arms and twenty-five tons of other props. Then Chester Pageant on July 16, which runs for two weeks, takes up 2,000 wigs and costumes of all ages and a staff of ten people continually on the spot. For the Fulham (Army) Pageant there are 400 odd uniforms occupied in the artillery battle scenes, 'Corunna,' &c.; and a curious order for this week, a whole pastoral play—everything—called A Maiden's Wit, dressed in the Georgian period, to be played at the Rue Mozart, Passy, France. There!"

The new farcical play was accorded a hearty reception, and the authoress was warmly called at the termination of the performance. Though the story of the play is slight, it is well treated, and the dialogue throughout is instinct with humour. The plot is interspersed with some rare fun that arises over the matrimonial designs of Mr. Pierpoint Porches, a highly respectable stockbroker, who desires to bring about the marriage of his niece Silvia with the son of a very old friend, Mr. Bracebridge. It happens, however, that Mr. Porches's son and heir, Captain Porches, is in love with Silvia, and to defeat the design of his sire he, by the aid of a wig, whiskers, and false nose, so successfully masquerades as his father, that he not only deceives his mother and the entire household, but gives a paternal consent to his own wedding. Captain Porches has unfortunately become involved in a card scandal, and after striking a brother officer he escapes to avoid arrest by the police. He discloses his identity to his sister, Kate Bellingham, and to his soldier servant, Angus Macpherson, and the two put their heads together to extricate him from his troubles. Shortly after Porches, sen., arrives with Charles Bracebridge, and the services of the Captain's servant, Angus, are enlisted to frustrate the designs of the old stockbroker. Angus is disguised as Silvia, and at once proceeds to make violent love to Charles Bracebridge, who is disappointed, not to say much disgusted, with his prospective bride, and eventually, much to his relief, manages to escape from her. Hardly has he done so than Angus encounters Porches, sen., and introduces himself as Janet Macpherson, Angus's wife. So the complications continue until Mr. Porches meets his household, and is so mystified that he at last denounces them as a lot of lunatics. To make matters worse, Mr. Porches and Charles Bracebridge are arrested at the instigation of Angus, and are taken off to the police station, but happily are bailed out by a friend of the captain. In the end, however, everything works out smoothly. Charles Bracebridge and Kate Bellingham find they are well suited to each other, and Frank and Silvia also come to a similar understanding.

Miss Ella Erskine played the part of Kate Bellingham with much vivacity, and looked very handsome in some charming costumes. She was especially successful in her love scenes with Charles Bracebridge. Miss Rita Tomkins was a dignified Mrs. Porches; and Miss Muriel Johnston made the sweetest and daintiest Silvia Porches. Mr. Blake Adams was admirably suited to the character of Angus Macpherson, his quaintly characterised embodiment of a Scotchman being highly diverting, and much of the success of the play was due to his efforts. The part of Porches, sen., was in the experienced hands of Mr. Henry Doughty, who was responsible for the production of the piece. Charles Bracebridge had a manly representative in Mr. Stephen T. Ewart. Able support was also given by Mr. George Fisher, Mr. Howard Brenan, and Mr. Hubert Pinder.

"SCARAMOUCH."

Scaramouch ..... MISS ETHEL IRVING
John Delorme ..... MR. NORMAN FORBES
Craven ..... MR. RICHARD HATTERAS

The story of Scaramouch is that of a very rich man who is suffering from depression and ennui, so that his life is a burden to him. As he is about to commit suicide a young beggar-girl enters through the window of the room, and tells him that the dread of starvation has brought her to the point of resolving to drown herself. She gets hold of the pistol with which Delorme was about to commit suicide, and orders him to write her a cheque for £50,000. Delorme tells her to fire, and the girl is softened and soon goes to sleep. Eventually the two intended suicides cancel each other's griefs, and all ends happily. That admirable artist Miss Ethel Irving was very characteristic and clever as Scaramouch; Mr. Norman Forbes gave a firm and impressive performance as John Delorme; and Mr. Richard Hatteras was good as the Secretary. Mr. Barrie's quaint sketch A Slice from Life was another item in the bill of the performance, which was for the benefit of the National League for Physical Education and Improvement.

ROYAL OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

On Friday night, July 1, Meyerbeer's opera, Gli Ugonotti, was performed at Covent Garden, the house being filled in every part. For this opera a strong cast is always required, and in the performance on Friday night the female parts, at least, had splendid representatives. Mme. Tetrazzini and Mlle. Destinn appeared as Margarita di Valois and Valentina, and both famous artists being in fine voice, the music was superbly sung. Margarita's florid air, "A questa voce sola," was so brilliantly sung and the concluding shake on a high note executed with such exquisite ease and finish by Mme. Tetrazzini that the audience were aroused to great enthusiasm. Mlle. Destinn also acted and sang with magnificent dramatic expression, and in the great duet with Raoul at the close of the opera she rendered the music with a power and intensity that has never been surpassed. In the part of Raoul Signor Zerola certainly displayed vigour, particularly in the last act, but earlier in the opera his singing of "Piu Bianca dei Velo," and the duet with Valentina, "Tu mio sospir," in the matter of perfect intonation left something to be desired. The rich, sonorous voice of Mr. Murray Davey was heard to advantage in the music of the rugged old Huguenot soldier Marcello, and "Finita e pe frati," the famous "Piff paff" solo, was ably sung. M. Lestelly as the gallant Conte di Nevers proved himself a clever artist in spite of a certain absence of dignity in his acting; and the San Bris of Mr. Edmund Burke had many excellent features. Mlle. Edna de Lima's voice was somewhat light for Urbano's music, but she sang "Nobil Signor" gracefully and acted well. For the rest of the cast, Travennes, De Cossé, and Bois-Rosé were successfully impersonated by Signor Zucchi, Mr. D'Oisly, and M. Lheureux. Mme. Savage and Mme. Bérat appeared as the first and second maid of honour; and Mlle. Egener in the little part of Leonardo. The opera was handsomely mounted, the chorus sang with spirit and animation, and the delightful ballet in the second act was admirably danced. Signor Panizza conducted, and under his able direction the orchestra gave an excellent account of Meyerbeer's attractive score.

La Traviata was given at Covent Garden on Saturday night, July 2, when, owing to the indisposition of Mme. Melba, Miss Miranda appeared as the unhappy Violetta, and made a good impression on the audience by her excellent singing and the fresh, youthful quality of her voice. Mr. McCormack sustained the part of Alfredo, and Signor Sammarco that of the elder Germont, both their impersonations being familiar and greatly esteemed by the operatic public. Signor Campanini conducted, and the minor characters were ably undertaken.

Baron Frederic d'Erlanger's opera, Tess, founded on the well-known novel of Mr. Thomas Hardy, was performed for the first time this season at Covent Garden on Wednesday night. When produced last year at the Royal Opera, Tess aroused considerable interest, due partly to d'Erlanger's melodious music, and also to Signor Illica's libretto, which gives the chief incidents and the sylvan spirit of Mr. Hardy's powerful rustic story. Mlle. Destinn again impersonates the unfortunate Tess, and, although the part does not give Mlle. Destinn much opportunity for the display of her great dramatic gifts, the music was sung with unfailing beauty of tone and pathetic feeling. Mr. Riccardo Martin as Angel Clare achieved a great success. The composer has written the most dramatic music in the opera for this part, and Mr. Martin sang with splendid power and fervour. In the scene of Clare's proposal to Tess, and the fine duet at the close of the last act, Mr. Martin was supremely effective, and he shared the honours with Mlle. Destinn in the enthusiastic applause. Signor Sammarco again played Alec d'Urberville, and his reading of the part could not be surpassed. Vocally, Signor Malatesta was excellent as Jack, Tess's father, and Mme. Bérat gave a clever study of Joan. Mlle. De Lys sang well as Aby, Tess's brother, while Nancy and the jealous Dark-Car were ably undertaken by Mlle. Egener and Mlle. Bourgeois. The picturesque scene of Jack Durbeyfield's old cottage in Blackmoor Vale, Wessex, and the realistic Talbothay's Dairy were admirable stage effects, and greatly admired, while the delightful May Day rustic revels and the quaint old world dance helped to give the sylvan atmosphere to both music and story. The chorus sang with excellent effect, both in the dairy scene and the female bridal chorus. Signor Panizza conducted, and the audience accorded the composer a very hearty reception when he appeared with Mlle. Destinn and Mr. Martin at the close of the third act.

THE BEECHAM OPERA SEASON.

Johann Strauss's comic opera Die Fledermaus (The Bat) was successfully revived by Mr. Thomas Beecham at His Majesty's Theatre on Monday night. The composer, who was born in 1825 at Vienna, has written much fascinating dance music, and besides Fledermaus, several small operas—Indigo Cagliostro, Methusaleu, Blindekuh, and Spitzentuch—while the number of his works amount to five hundred.

The plot of Die Fledermaus is admirably adapted to the bright, sparkling music. Eisenstein, the hero, for having insulted and struck an officer of the Court, has to serve a short term of imprisonment, but having a little time before the arrest, he goes to a masked ball given by a Russian Prince. Now Eisenstein has a very attractive wife of coquettish disposition, and she, thinking her husband has gone off to prison, accepts an invitation to supper from Alfred, a singer and former admirer. A private room is engaged, but while Alfred and Eisenstein's wife, Rosalinde, are having supper, the Governor of the gaol seeking Eisenstein arrives, and thinking Alfred is the man he wants, as Rosalinde, to save appearances, does not undeceive him, takes him off to prison. Rosalinde, deprived of her lover, and fearing a dull time, goes to the same fancy dress ball of the Prince, wearing a mask and domino. Little thinking to find his wife at the ball, Eisenstein carries on a violent flirtation with Rosalinde. In the last act, which takes place in the Governor's room in the prison, all complications are cleared up. The joyous spirit and vivacity of the music, Rosalinde's charming Hungarian song, the delightful dance music in the ballroom scene, and the various amusing situations were all so greatly enjoyed by the large audience that it is a surprising thing such an attractive and melodious opera should not have been heard for so many years. The performance on Monday night was excellent in many respects. Mr. Joseph O'Mara as the gay Eisenstein sang and acted in quite the right spirit, while Miss Carrie Tubb greatly distinguished herself in the part of Rosalinde, and in the ballroom scene gave her solo with brilliant effect. Mr. Walter Passmore as the humorous Governor of the gaol was extremely comic, and Mr. John Bardsley may be warmly praised for his clever study of Rosalinde's old lover. Mr. Frederick Ranalow appeared as the solicitor friend of Eisenstein, and the small, but amusing part of Mrs. Eisenstein's maid, who comes to the ball in a dress of her mistress, was capitally played by Miss Beatrice La Palmo. Miss Muriel Terry was very successful as the Russian Prince who gives the masked ball, and Miss Vivian Tailleur proved a graceful exponent of the enchanting dance music. The costumes were handsome, and the scene of the masked ball rich in colour and very picturesque. Mr. McCunn conducted, and the orchestra gave a successful account of Strauss's brilliant score.

"FLYAWAY'S DERBY."

Farcical Sketch, by Sydney Blow and Douglas Hoare, Music by Edward Jones, Produced at the Canterbury, on Monday, July 4.

Tim Welsh .....Mr. W. Cutler
Barney Flipp .....Mr. Colston Mansell
Lord Fairfax .....Mr. Edward Leith
Sam Defoe .....Mr. Willie West
P.C. Shuffiebottom .....Mr. Walter Nugent
Jim Defoe ....."Smith"

Ludicrous incidents abound in this farcical playlet, which evidently appealed to Monday night's audience at the Canterbury, when the sketch was played before an appreciative audience, who found plenty of excuse for laughter in the "flying" feats of Jim Defoe and the other characters who partake of some of his lively mixture. Jim, an ex-jockey, enjoys the reputation of being known as the "laziest man on earth." When we first make his acquaintance he is sleeping soundly in his apartment, and his son Sam, a jockey, enters and endeavours to arouse his snoring sire. All attempts fail until the young man draws the stopper from a bottle of beer, and Jim then begins to take an interest in life. While he has been sleeping, it should be mentioned Tim Welsh, the owner of a racehorse Temperley, and Barney Flipp, his jockey, have entered the room, and expressed their determination of preventing Sam from riding Flyaway, the one horse they fear will beat Temperley in the Derby. Their plan is to leave a bottle of "dope" in Sammy's room, and then call in the police and have him arrested. Ere this happens, however, Jimmy is induced to test the efficacy of some mixture sent him guaranteed to make him lively. Extraordinary results follow the sprinkling of a little of the fluid on different parts of his body, and eventually he soars upwards till the ceiling is reached. As he is attired in his night-shirt the spectacle is a very ludicrous one. When Police-Constable Shuffiebottom comes to arrest his son, a little of the flying fluid is administered to him, with a like result, and, finally, the two disappear through the window. In the next scene, the interior of a police-court, Sammy is in the dock charged with attempting to nobble Temperley. Of course, he protests his innocence, and in spite of his pleadings that he is to ride Flyaway in half an hour is about to be taken to the cells when his father and Shuffiebottom fly in by the window. The judge's astonishment and indignation at the curious behaviour of the twain may be imagined, and as he refuses to release Sammy he also is sprinkled with the flying fluid, and joins the others in their mid-air careerings. The third scene shows the Weighing-room, Epsom. Flyaway's owner, Lord Fairfax, is anxiously awaiting the arrival of his jockey Sammy. He must arrive in two more minutes if he is to ride Flyaway, and as he fails to put in an appearance his father, Jim Defoe, offers to ride in his stead. In the last scene, the course at Epsom, a very animated and well-staged picture, we see the horses going up to the starting-post, and in the race for the Derby Jim's mount literally flies home. The sketch was presented by Mr. George Kirby's company, and the important part of Jim Defoe was undertaken by "Smith," the new comedian from the Strand Theatre. Very droll was Smith in the amusing business of the first scene, and his performance throughout was a most comic one. Mr. Willie West as his son Sammy also submitted a funny impersonation; Mr. Edward Leith as the anxious owner, Lord Fairfax, contributed an admirable performance; and the other parts were all capitally undertaken. The flying business was adroitly managed, the effects being arranged by Messrs. Kirby.

The variety portion of the bill at the Canterbury contains many other entertaining items, early in the evening Mr. Gordon Stretton, the "natural coon," contributing a tuneful darkey ditty, his accompanying dance being also well executed and loudly acclaimed. Mr. Stretton has a good voice and style, and his artistic impersonations and scenas, "There's a Brown Girl out in Old Dahomey," &c., should speedily bring him to the front. Little Zola has an eccentric style and a couple of comic songs that gain him liberal applause; Raymond, the "artistic coon," is assisted by his clever daughter Ivy in some graceful and difficult dances that win loud expressions of approval; Daisy Stratton and Ethel Eden are a couple of captivating comediennes and dancers who come in for much admiration; and the artistic and varied musical act of the Carina Sisters merits all the appreciation it receives. Jack Lane, the Yorkshire rustic, employs a droll method which is very effective, his impersonations of different people singing "Has anyone here seen Kelly?" especially creating hilarity. The Brothers Rees do some wonderful feats in cannon-ball lifting, &c., their military act, "Soldiers at Play," being a well-worked interlude; and the Columbia Trio, vocal comedians, quite justify their title. As funny men they are particularly resourceful and always laughter-compelling, their turn being full of surprises, and their vocal numbers are all well rendered. Altogether a very enjoyable interlude. Miss Frances Letty contributes three well differentiated and taking impersonations that prove her versatility and cleverness, her concluding number, a very attractive and humorously worked coon song and dance, especially enabling her to display her expertness as a dancer. She received valuable assistance in this item from a smart youngster, and the piano-playing of Mr. James Sutton, America's brilliant rag-time pianist, also added to the attractiveness of a very popular turn. Harry Champion rattled off at lightning speed the familiar "Boiled beef and carrots," and a couple of other mirth-provoking ditties, and his welcome was most cordial. Wilbert and Leland submitted a comic nautical novelty that includes much clever flying-ring business; Miss Gladys Soman's fine voice was heard with pleasure in "Star of my life" and another number; and Mr. Herbert Rule amused greatly with a couple of comic ditties, the one with the "Yip-i-addy-i-ay"-like chorus being particularly laughable.

Animated Weekly Newspaper at Swansea.

Excellent galleries of living pictures are to be seen at the Palace, Shaftesbury, and Tivoli Bioscope Halls, Swansea. Besides the usual features to which we have now quite grown accustomed—features which have built up enduring popularity for this class of entertainment—a distinct novelty was introduced last week in the shape of an animated weekly newspaper, which will be found replete with living pictures from all the news-centres of the world. The cinephone and vivaphone formed a prominent part in the bill, and the vocalist was Miss Beatrice Morris.

A novel turn has been engaged at the Tivoli, viz., the Two Bobs (Bob Adams and Bob Alden). These gentlemen made their first appearance in England last week at the Tivoli in characteristic American songs. On their initial performance they achieved an instantaneous success. Their business is smart and refined, and they have been exclusively engaged to appear until they sail for America in September to fulfil a long tour, reappearing at the Tivoli next year.

The marvellous balancing act performed by the Zantrellas has been secured by Mr. Harry Rickards for Australia through Tom Pacey's agency.

A sale will take place at the Army Pageant Costume Dept., in Fulham-road, on July 11 to 17, of Army Pageant costumes and uniforms, Army Pageant armour of all periods from Edward III. to Charles I., and embroidered armorial surcoats, painted banners, steel swords and shields, from authentic designs. The sale should include many excellent bargains.

THE EMPIRE ON MOTORS.

The ideal way of travelling into the country is by motor, and the delights which the staff of the Empire, Leicester-square, experienced on the occasion of their outing last year led to a unanimous demand for a repetition. A detachment of Great Western char-à-bancs, 150 of which minister to the needs of excursionists and travellers all over the country, were accordingly chartered for last Sunday, when the Empire staff, some 180 strong, reviewed the leafy panorama provided by a journey through the Thames Valley. A special train from Paddington landed the party within half an hour at Slough, where seven luxuriously-appointed motor-cars were quickly brought up to convey the excursionists to Reading, some twenty-five miles distant.

Spasms of sunshine induced the hope that the day would be fine, but the "sky-border" too constantly gave way to "dark-cloth." No more effectual way of cheating the elements, however, can be conceived than that of travelling by motor, and the excursionists, snugly housed in the char-à-bancs, were able to survey the beauties of the surrounding country untouched by the heavy downpour, which was almost incessant. The way lay through picturesque Eton, and, by permission of the Deputy-Ranger, through Windsor Forest, where the pretty white goats and the horned deer were objects of admiration. Through Windsor Park, via Queen Anne's Gateway, the party was taken on to the castle, to gaze reverently at the chapel where King Edward sleeps his last sleep, and note the very paths which the historic procession traversed. By way of Ascot Racecourse the motors sped, and shortly after a halt was made at the Crispin, where the rain suspended operations for just sufficient time to allow of refreshments to be indulged in in delightfully al fresco style.

Reading was reached at 1.30, and dinner was immediately served at Caversham Bridge Hotel, in a spacious apartment overlooking the river. Mr. A. Aldin, Mr. H. J. Hitchins' able lieutenant, presided, and the speeches were short and to the point. The loyal toasts having been honoured, Mr. A. J. Reynolds, the energetic secretary for the outing, whose ubiquity during the day was little short of marvellous, gave "Prosperity to the Directors and Management of the Empire Theatre," acknowledging, with warm thanks, the support given to the outing by a handsome cheque for twenty guineas. He begged Mr. Aldin to accept their very best thanks for his efforts towards bringing the affair to a successful issue.

The Chairman said it gave him great pleasure once more to occupy that proud position. Mr. Hitchins, their esteemed manager, was unfortunately unable to be present, but he wished them well. Mr. Aldin proposed the health of "The Visitors," and coupled with it the name of Mr. W. C. Simpson, the theatrical representative of the Great Western Railway.

Mr. Simpson, who was heartily cheered, said they had not come to make speeches; they had come for the trip. He hoped they would enjoy themselves, as everyone did when they went to the Empire. So far as the Great Western Railway was concerned, he trusted he would have many opportunities of doing in the future what he had in the past. He thanked them earnestly on behalf of the visitors for the kind welcome extended to them.

Mr. Barker proposed the health of the hard-working secretary and stewards, coupling with it the names of Mr. Reynolds (their secretary) and Mr. C. Winter (their treasurer).

Mr. Reynolds acknowledged the toast, saying that the executive had done all in their power to make the day a success, but the weather they did not provide for. Mr. Winter was called for, but, by a brilliant strategical movement, evaded the necessity for making a speech; while Captain Williams, who enjoys remarkable popularity with the staff, acknowledged from the precarious eminence of a chair the ovation which greeted his belated entry.

The afternoon was spent on the water, a trip up river towards Pangbourne being taken on the steam launch Britannia. Meanwhile, Mr. Simpson and his party tested the merits of a fine new car in an exhilarating ride to Henley. Tea at the Caversham preceded the journey back, and before the admiring eyes of the natives the party embarked soon after six for Slough, by way of Maidenhead and Taplow. The journey was accomplished in marvellously quick time, and Mr. Reynolds, who had meanwhile led the harmony during the home journey, was able to see his merry men safely aboard the train, which reached town at ten precisely. The committee, it should be added, were Messrs. W. Sheldon, E. Bungay, T. Russell, C. Winter, P. Grieveson, and E. Heath. Every satisfaction was again expressed at the means of locomotion adopted. The motors, the cost of which compares very favourably with that of other modes of travelling, are, it may be added, always at the service of similar outings, a few days' notice to Mr. Simpson only being requisite.

"SPIES OF THE ——?"

Admiral Sir James Tindley ....Mr. Geo. Ide
Baron Von Groom .....Mr. Robert Forsyth
Adolf Stumpff .....Mr. Arthur Charrington
Frank Rutley .....Mr. A. Tugg
Violet Fairford .....Miss Evelyn Beresford

This is described by the authors as an incident of England's everyday peril, and deals with the manner in which a Continental Power seeks to acquire secret information regarding British naval and military matters. The action takes place in the Admiralty House, Portsmouth, and it seems that the Admiral has invented an electric airship which would destroy any invading army. The Baron Von Groom, alias Burrowes, under which name he is in the service of the English Government, wishes to secure the plans for his own Government, and he finds out from Stumpff, a worthless character, that Violet Fairford, the Admiral's secretary, has some years before got into the clutches of Stumpff, but has managed to escape from the life he tried to force her into. Violet is engaged to Frank Rutley, of the Secret Service, to whom the Admiral shows his invention. In their absence the Baron tries to get the plans from Violet, after having threatened to expose her past life to her lover. The Baron tries to get her own story from her lips and record it on a phonograph. Happily, by chance Violet is able to pass off some worthless plans on him, and in the scene which follows the Baron falls into his own trap, for the phonograph records his villainy, and eventually leads to his full exposure and at the same time proves Violet's fine character.

It is a well-written little play, and created great enthusiasm. Miss Evelyn Beresford is capital as Violet, a part she plays with much charm. Mr. G. Ide makes a fine Admiral, while Mr. A. Tugg is seen to advantage as Frank Rutley. The Baron is depicted with much skill by Mr. Robert Forsyth, who scores an unqualified success by his effective rendering of the part. The mounting is in every way adequate, and the whole may be written down as a big success.

Cinema House.

Cinema House, 225, Oxford-street, the enterprise of the London Cinematograph Company, the latest and perhaps the most ambitious of living picture theatres in London, the building also including a restaurant and suites of offices, will be opened by the Duchess of Portland on July 14, at three o'clock in the afternoon.

THE LATE MR. B. H. KITCHEN.

Mr. B. H. Kitchen, who completed his eightieth year on the 25th ult., did not long survive his birthday. He passed away on Friday, the 30th ult., at Brixton, and in his death another link is snapped with the famous Grimaldi, for the famous old clown, like others of his generation, took the great Joey as his model. He was the last of the old English school of pantomimists, and was also famed for his performance in The Dumb Man of Manchester. He was the father of Fred, Harry, and the late Dick Kitchen. It is now seventy-three years since the deceased gentleman was first apprenticed to Messrs. Frampton and Fenton at the Victoria Theatre, Waterloo-road, and he worked continuously for fifty-seven years, taking his farewell of the stage at the Theatre Royal, Woolwich, at Christmas, 1894. Fred Frampton, one of his masters, during his career was connected with the Adelphi and Olympic Theatres, and was stage-manager for Alfred Wigan at the Old Queen's Theatre, Long Acre. He was likewise one of the first directors of the Royal General Theatrical Fund, and died on Nov. 26, 1884. A notable performance by Mr. Kitchen was Dusty Bob in Mr. Joe Cave's revival of Tom and Jerry on March 5, 1870. In criticising the representation, a writer in our columns at the time said:—"A Grimaldi comic pantomime scene was introduced just before the finale, and is full of that bustling and practical fun so dear to a Victoria audience, when Mr. Kitchen is the clown, and consents to play the fiddle, sing comic songs, and dance a hornpipe in answer to the reiterated 'Bravo, Kitchen!' which greets his efforts." Mr. James Fawn, who played Jerry to the Tom of Mr. J. H. Fitzpatrick, was then "an energetic young fellow, with a good-humoured face that exactly fitted him for the part." Misses Harriet and Florence Farren, sisters of the celebrated Nellie, were also in the cast.

Mr. Kitchen was harlequin on Boxing Day in 1851 in the pantomime of The Lion and the Unicorn, by Mr. Higgie, one of the members of the stock company, Mr. Paul Herring being the clown. Variety used to be the order of the day at the Victoria in the fifties, for after the presentation of that highly moral drama of real life The Betting Boy's Career, from his Home to the Hulks—quite a Hogarthian piece—we read of young Kitchen giving a variety of dancing, assisted by Mlle. Zitella and Phœbe Johnson, and of his appearance in the ballet The Dream Before the Wedding, which completed an evening in which two dramas were given. This was in 1851. Boxing night in 1852 was ushered in at the "Vic." by a production of Uncle Tom's Cabin—of which there were numerous versions—and concluded with the pantomime The World of Flowers; or, Harlequin King Nosey and the Old Woman and Her Six Daughters from Baby Land, written by E. L. Blanchard, who gave so much of his brightest humour in later years to the Christmas spectacles presented at Old Drury. In the production mentioned, Mr. Kitchen played Prince Calidor—a part that would be most probably assigned to a lady in the present day—and harlequin. He played harlequin at the same house on Boxing Day, 1853, in The Seven Champions of Christendom pantomime. He was quite in his element in the canine drama of the day, and The Mountebanks; or, The Showman and His Dog, the Dumb Girl of Genoa, The Life of a Tramp; or, Punch and His Dog Toby, and the famous Dog of Montargis; or, The Forest of Bondy were among his histrionic triumphs.

In 1863 he was again at the Victoria, to play clown in the "stupendous spectacular pantomime" by F. Fenton and W. R. Osman, entitled Giselle; or, The Phantom Night Dancers. The subject had been musically treated by E. J. Loder, and Adolphe Adam had written a ballet, Giselle, for the Grand Opera, Paris, in 1841. This was but recently reproduced at the Coliseum. Like Fred Evans, Tom Lovell, and other clowns, Kitchen gravitated to the halls, and we meet with his name in the Metropolitan programmes in the ballets Comic Lovers, The Dancing Scotchman, Mad as a March Hare, and La Statue Blanche. This was during the proprietorship of Mr. Wm. Meacock in 1866. In the fifties one of his contemporaries was James Doughty, who, when at the Grecian, was designated "The King of Clowns." This veteran is still alive, and is now earning his living with a troupe of performing dogs at Brighton.

Mr. Watty Brunton writes:—"Still another of our old players has answered the 'last call'—R. H. Kitchen, who was peacefully laid to rest in Norwood Cemetery on Wednesday, July 6, at the great age of eighty years. With him goes the last of the true 'English School' of pantomimic art. Apprenticed to the late Mr. Frampton in the year 1837, he became one of his most promising pupils, and during his apprenticeship played many parts. Not only did he shine as a pantomimist, he even essayed Shakespeare, he was also a musician of no mean ability, and from the waving of the harlequin's wand he developed into Clown, who in his day had no equal. For 57 years he was the public's servant, and the name, I venture to think, will not die while we have such a comedian as his youngest son, Fred Kitchen, in our midst.

"He was followed to the grave by Mrs. R. H. Kitchen (widow), Mrs. George Orford (daughter), Mrs. Sutherland (daughter), Mr. and Mrs. Fred and Harry Kitchen, Mr. Reuben Kitchen, Mrs. Dick Kitchen, junr., Miss Carrie Kitchen, Miss Gladys Orford, Mr. Herbert Darnley, Mr. Watty Brunton, Mr. Frank Boisset, Mr. Ted Almonti, Mr. Charles Jones, Mr. John Osborne.

"Amongst the numerous wreaths sent were those from 'Fred and Nell,' Boys and Girls of Perkins, M.P. Co., Private Potts Co., Mr. and Mrs. Fred Boisset, Mr. and Mrs. Will Cowan, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Reaney, Hermance, Dick, and Harry, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Rees, Reuben, Lizzie, Mrs. George Orford, Sid, Harry, Gladys, and Georgie Orford, Harry, Annie, and Dolly, Miss Burry (sister-in-law), Miss Tiny Kitchen and Mr. Herbert Darnley (Cap and Bells), and one with no card. Amongst those at the graveside were noticed: James Almonti, Albert De Voy, George Craig, Steve Asher, W. Harris, James Le Fre and Mrs. Pahud."

Novel Pictures at Jersey.

Mr. E. Clements, Mr. Albany Ward's smart cinematograph operator at the Jersey Opera House, has this week produced a most interesting and excellent film, taken by himself, of the potato industry. Jersey undoubtedly possesses the greatest ready money market in the world, for although the season only lasts ten weeks, an average of £400,000 is paid on the nail to the farmers during this short period, and over 65,000 tons of potatoes are shipped. The largest cargo to leave the island was 17,059 packages, weighing 925 tons. Mr. Clements has admirably depicted the tubers being dug in the fields and carted through the picturesque lanes of the island to the busy scene on the St. Helier market, where the English merchants are shown bidding against each other for the farmers' produce. This is followed by animated scenes of the potatoes being packed in the stores and shipped on board the steamers for England.

THE ROSHERVILLE GALA.

"The place to spend a happy day!" Yes, in spite of leaden skies and the heavy rain which dropped almost continuously throughout the afternoon, those who journeyed to the famous gardens at Gravesend on Wednesday had only themselves to blame if they failed to derive enjoyment from their outing. The occasion was a fête and gala in aid of the Music Hall Benevolent Institution, under the patronage of Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., Lady Parker, Alderman H. E. Davis, C.C., Mayor of Gravesend; W. E. Randall, Mayor of Chatham; Mr. T. Church, chairman Northfleet Council; the Grand Order of Water Rats; the Terriers Association, and the Music Hall Artists' Railway Association. The objects of the institution are well known to all interested in the variety profession, and there was great disappointment when it became known that Mr. Joe Elvin, who is particularly interested in this work of charity, being its founder and a very liberal supporter, would be unable to be present owing to indisposition. Amongst the well-known artists who put in an appearance and worked hard throughout the day, may be mentioned Mr. G. H. Chirgwin, who not only did a turn at the open-air entertainment during the afternoon, but used his persuasive powers to entice the multitude into the side-shows, and also proved himself a crack shot at the rifle range, the "white-eyed" one smashing a bottle with almost every shot. Mr. Charles Coborn likewise was early on the scene, and he it was who bravely volunteered to do the first turn at the alfresco concert in the pouring rain and face an array of empty chairs, the audience seated in shelters at the side, heartily applauding him in his two songs, "Nothing but girls" and that perennial favourite "The man who broke the bank at Monte Carlo." Other artists who appeared at the afternoon concert were Marie Blythe, Gertie Gitana, Alexandra Dagmar, Constance Moxon, Florrie Forde, Andy Burn, Harry Wright, Ross and Grayson, Maidie Scott, and the Tally Ho Trio. At the evening concert the following appeared:—Fred Greville, Adele Levey, Charles Coborn, Dolly Harmer, Gilbert Girard, Jessie Albini, Edwin Barwick, Elsa Joel, Walter Norman, Constance Moxon, Pat Carey, Florrie Robina, and Professor Astley. Mr. Pat Carey was stage manager, assisted by Mr. Edward Giles.

At intervals, in the Old Billiard-room, Jack Collinson's celebrated company was well patronised in the representation of the old Richardson show, the drama of Maria Martin; or, the Murder in the Red Barn, Miss Lottie Swinburne, and Messrs. W. May, Jack Collinson, and Monte Maitland enacting this famous "blood-curdler." Admission to this "grand theatrical treat" could be obtained for the modest price of twopence; fauteuils a penny extra. Lieutenant Albini, assisted by Mlle. Gautier, presented an entertainment of conjuring and legerdemain; and Hermalin, the handcuff king, was also announced to give his marvellous performance. The unsophisticated were lured into the mysterious magic caves; and not a few consulted Dolores as to their future in the palmist tent. Curtis Leo, the Irish Hindoo, in his marvellous performance of "Atching Heggs"; Lazernino, the Wizard from Dum-Dum, in "Feats of Fun and Fits of Folly"; Miss Florrie Robina, with her museum of all kinds of antique and interesting curios; all offered unique attractions. Jack Straw's Castle, under the direction of Jack Straw, assisted by Miss Flo Hastings, boasted "a sheep which talks," and Jeaps' cinematograph theatre, with all the latest pictures, appeared to be well patronised. Then there were the Kokobama Dandies, and Clifford and Hill's Pierrot Company; the Metzgar-Leno aeroplane, designed and made by Messrs. Metzgar Bros. and Leno (son of the lamented Dan); and Astley's Marvels of the age, the smallest horses in the world.

The "Fun City" suffered severely owing to the miserable weather, but those who tramped through the slush saw many well-known pros pleading for patronage at cocoanut-shies, roundabouts, and all the fun of the fair. Mr. Arthur Were, the popular secretary of the Terriers' Association, tried hard to do business at a stall where, for the humble brown, one was entitled to three shots at a number of globes containing goldfish. If you were successful in placing a ball in one of the globes, it was yours, goldfish and all. The proceedings were considerably enlivened by the members of the Sutcliffe Family, who paraded the grounds with drum and pipes; and the fine band of H.M. Royal Marines, under the direction of Mr. Charles Hoby, played selections during the afternoon and evening. At a ballad concert in the evening the following gave their services:—Miss F. Raynor, Mr. C. R. Green, Miss Bertha Barnes, Miss Katie Cohen, Mr. Alec Davidson, Mr. F. Wilson, and the Kokobama Dandies. Many well-known and charmingly-costumed ladies sold programmes, flowers, picture postcards, &c., while their earnest appeals for pence in the collecting "bricks" should result in a substantial sum. Mr. C. Douglas Stuart and Mr. H. Cory Woodrow, the hon. directors, worked untiringly throughout a long day for the success of the function and the comfort of visitors; and valuable assistance was given by Messrs. Harry Blake, Harry Bawn, Ted E. Box, and a number of other well-known gentlemen. Amongst the programme-sellers and lady assistants were Mrs. H. Cory-Woodrow, Misses Elsie Athas, Kitty Bell, Chrissie Capell, Mrs. Chapman, Misses Radena Dey, Ethel Eldric, Mabel Fairchild, Blanche Key, Jeffie Maitland, Ada Norman, Cissie Paris, Minnie Priddle, Kathleen Rayburn, Marie Rose, Cissie Smythson, Indiana Smythson, Violet Tremayne, Amy Denton, Jessie Denton, Rose Bancroft, Kittie Brandow, Nellie Gannon, Flo Hastings, Elsa Joel, Marie Jones Ruth Maitland, Olga May, Violet Murray, Ruth Wallace, Mrs. Jimson, Mrs. Pete Murray, Miss Melinda May, Mrs. C. C. Bartram, Mrs. Bradsell, Mrs. Chas. Coborn, Mrs. Vernon Cowper, Mrs. Fawkes, and Mrs. G. H. Smythson.

"KARL'S LUCK."

Karl Wertheim .....Mr. Van Biene
Ned Christie .....Mr. George H. Child
Margaret Dane .....Miss Violet Vaughan
(from our own correspondent.)

This is a smart little curtain-raiser that is well worthy of being put in front of any play. We find two Australian miners seated in their hut deploring the constant bad luck that has followed their search for gold. The younger of them, Ned Christie, having left his wife many years before, decides to abandon the work of mining and commit suicide. With this intention he leaves the hut. Karl for some time has been advertising for a wife, and having decided upon one applicant asks her to call upon him. Ned suddenly returns with Karl's revolver, which he had taken by mistake, pointing out that had that been found beside his dead body he (Karl) might have been accused of shooting him. At this juncture the intended bride appears, and turns out to be Ned's wife, who believed him to be dead. Having parted in anger, there is a little coolness between the couple, but Karl's interference brings about a reconciliation. Mr. Van Biene played the rôle of the wife hunter in excellent style, and Mr. Child was particularly fine as the disconsolate young miner. Miss Vaughan made a pleasing Margaret.

Mr. W. F. Frame, who says a laugh's the cream o' medicine, will tickle the Brighton people next week in the Alhambra Theatre there with his hooch-aye stories.

LICENSING OF AGENTS.

In last week's issue we gave a full report of the hearing by a Select Committee of the House of Commons of the London County Council (General Powers) Bill, in which powers were sought to have licensed, instead of registered, all employment agencies in the County of London, including those connected with theatres and music halls. The Committee decided in favour of licensing, but stipulated that where a licence was refused, the applicant should have the right to appeal, in the first instance to a bench of magistrates, and, if necessary, to a Court of Quarter Sessions. On Tuesday the adjusted clauses were brought before the Committee by Mr. C. B. L. Browne (Messrs. Dyson and Co., Parliamentary agents), on behalf of the L.C.C. Mr. Johnson, Parliamentary agent, appeared for the petitioners against that part of the Bill dealing with employment agencies.

Mr. Browne put forward the following addition to Clause 25: "Provided that the licensing authority shall not refuse to renew a licence unless they shall have given to the person applying for such renewal not less than seven days' previous notice in writing that objections have been or will be taken to such renewal and unless on written application made within three days after the receipt of such notice they shall have afforded to the applicant an opportunity of being heard against such refusal." He said a proposal was made by the other side that not only should seven days' notice of objection be given, but also particulars of the objection itself. There were substantial difficulties in the way, as a week before consideration of the refusal to renew it might well be that all the grounds of objection were not within the minds of the licensing authority.

The addition was then inserted.

The chairman said he noticed that the L.C.C. proposed to charge three guineas for each new licence and one guinea a year for renewal. To a large agency three guineas might not seem much, but it was a large sum for a small business.

Mr. Browne said the object was to prevent persons of no substance or who were undesirable to embark in a business of this kind—at any rate that was one reason for the charge. Further, the administration of that part of the Act would involve a substantial amount of expense.

The Chairman: The Committee think two guineas for a new licence is enough.

The alteration was made, and the committee next accepted the following sub-sections to Clause 25: "(4) If the licensing authority refuse to grant or renew a licence under this part of the Act they shall, if required by the applicant, deliver to him within three days of the receipt of such requirement, particulars in writing of the ground or grounds, upon which such grant or renewal is refused.

"(5) Any person who deems himself aggrieved by the refusal of the Licensing Authority to grant or renew a licence to him may appeal, in the case of an employment agency in the City of London, to a magistrate of that City, or, in the case of any other employment agency, to a metropolitan police magistrate, provided that such appeal is made within fourteen days from the date of such refusal, and that not less than four days' notice in writing of such appeal is sent to the Licensing Authority."

The L.C.C. agent next asked to insert the following to Clause 25: "(6) The Licensing Authority or any person aggrieved by a decision of a magistrate under this section, may appeal therefrom to the next ensuing Court of Quarter Sessions."

Mr. Johnson objected to the inclusion of "the Licensing Authority." If an agent succeeded at a police court he might not have the means to go to a Court of Quarter Sessions if the Council took him there, and the sub-section, as it stood, would give the L.C.C. two shots to the agent's one.

The Committee decided to strike out the words "the Licensing Authority," and to substitute "next practicable court" for next ensuing Court of Quarter Sessions.

To Clause 25 there were also added the words "The costs of any appeal under this section shall be paid in such manner, and by such parties to the appeal, as the Court may direct."

Mr. Browne next raised the question as to the authority which should have power to revoke a licence following an offence. He said the L.C.C., as the Licensing Authority, might be expected to exercise wisely the wide powers given to them.

Mr. Johnson contended that it would not be logical for the authority appealed against to have the power to revoke a licence. It should be for a court considering the matter and imposing a penalty to say whether or not a licence should be revoked.

The Chairman asked what was done under the Act of 1905.

Mr. Johnson said it was done by the court, subject to appeal to Quarter Sessions. An offence might be a trivial one, and to give the L.C.C. the right to revoke a licence would be according them enormous powers.

The Chairman said the decision of the Committee was that the procedure of the Act of 1905 should be followed.

The following addition was made to Clause 26: "The Licensing Authority may make bye-laws requiring person holding licences under this part of the Act to keep either books, cards, or forms, at the option of such persons, showing the business conducted so far as it relates to their employment agencies, and for prescribing entries to be made in connection with such business, and for the prevention of fraud and immorality in the conduct of employment agencies, and for regulating any premises used for the purposes of, or in connection with, the business of such agencies."

To Clause 28 there was added the following: "Provided that no person who shall have appealed to a magistrate or to a Court of Quarter Sessions, in accordance with the provisions of this part of this Act, against a refusal by the Licensing Authority to grant a licence to any person making application under sub-section 2 of the section of this Act of which the marginal note is "Applications for licences," or to renew a licence, shall be liable to any proceedings under this section for the offence of carrying on an employment agency without a licence under this part of this Act until such appeal shall have been heard and determined, or shall have been abandoned."

The Bill, as amended, was then ordered to be reported to the House.

AN APPEAL FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

To the Editor of The Era.

Sir,—Messrs. Roberts and Archer, of the famous firm of Roberts, Archer, and Bartlett, are dead, and Mr. Fred Bartlett is at present in Cape Town, where opportunities for engagement are rare indeed. His financial position is precarious, and a few friends, both inside and outside the profession, help him—when they can. Mr. Bartlett is far advanced in years—long past the allotted span—and his friends suggested I should address you, asking that out of your goodness you would make an appeal on his behalf through your paper. There must be many in the profession who remember the kindly old gentleman, and who would be glad to help make his old age comfortable.

Any letters addressed to Mr. Bartlett, as above (care of W. Baxter), will be handed him.—Yours faithfully,

WALTER BAXTER,
Editor of the Cape Town Licensed Victuallers' and Sporting Gazette.

"THE GARDEN OF EVE."

A Comedy in Three Acts, from the Italian of Paolo Ferrari, Revenge is Sweet, Produced at the Zoological Gardens, Clifton, Bristol, on July 1.

Eve, Lady Dacre — Miss Jean Sterling Mackinlay
Miss Adela Lane — Miss Margaret Bussé
Marie — Miss Aileen Curran
John Cartwright — Mr. Herbert Dansey
Sir Charles Blundell — Mr. E. Harcourt-Williams

(from our own correspondent.)

The action of the comedy takes place in the garden of Lady Dacre's villa on the Riviera. Her ladyship is a young and wealthy widow, and she has several suitors. Sir Charles Blundell is anxious to buy the villa, from the sentimental reason that his mother died there, and Lady Dacre expresses her willingness to exchange the villa for one of Sir Charles', but does not wish to sell. Adela Lane, who has come into a large fortune, and Cartwright have various unpleasant things to say about Lady Dacre, who happens to overhear their "cattish" remarks, and she resolves to teach them a lesson. Sir Charles, much against his inclinations, gets drawn into the petty gossip, and after a lot of misunderstanding and amusing complications Lady Dacre agrees to marry Sir Charles, and Cartwright and Adela resolve to take a similar step.

Mr. Harcourt-Williams and Miss Mackinlay acted cleverly their respective parts of Sir Charles Blundell and Lady Dacre, being admirably supported by Miss Margaret Bussé and Mr. Herbert Dansey, and Miss Aileen Curran made an attractive French waiting-maid.

Despite wind and rain, a large number of well-known showmen, roundabout proprietors, &c., connected with the Midland Counties, assembled, at Tom Norman's invitation, to compete for the well-known concern of Mr. Arthur Dobson, who is retiring from the business. Competition was brisk, sharp, and lively from start to finish, our old friend Ball starting the bidding for the riding machine, traction engine, &c., at £700, which very quickly ran up to £1,300, at which figure it was knocked down to that well-known and much-respected Shropshire traveller, Mrs. Gotthimer, the splendid saloon carriage being purchased by Mr. Jacob Gotthimer, husband of the above lady, for £55. After the sale the company returned to the Rifleman Hotel, where a splendid repast was provided by the host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Newton, and a very pleasant evening was spent.

Mr. Joseph Wright, "the friend of the showmen's children," will give his annual treat on Glasgow Fair Sunday, July 17, to the youthful wanderers who will assemble on the show ground. The function is looked forward to with much anticipation by the showmen and showwomen of the future, and by the Boswell and Lovells of the gipsy tribes, who look to Mr. Wright as their "Romany Rye."

The semi-final round for the inter-theatre golf shield, between the Gaiety and Daly's Theatres, was played on June 28 at Bushey Hall, and resulted in a win for Daly's by three games to love. N. A. Knox beat J. A. Evelyn, 6 and 5; W. H. P. Price beat A. Hatherton, 5 and 3; H. A. Henson beat E. Torrens, 6 and 5. Daly's will now meet the Comedy in the final, when 36 holes have to be played.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—If I write you much oftener, I expect you will want to set the dog on to me next time I call. But I can't help it. It's a good cause, and my chairman, Albert Le Fre, says I've got to keep on talking and begging till he tells me to stop. Well, we are getting along very nicely. What we want now is lots of entries for the various competitions and splendid prizes. Intending competitors should send in to Albert Le Fre, 49, Upper Tulse Hill, S.W., at once. Closing time for these first post next Wednesday morning, 13th inst.

Got prizes last night from our old friends Billy Grimes and Alf. Abrahams; G. H. Elliott sent along a handsome gift; Mr. H. G. Pelissier, of "The Follies," has given me a donation; so has Chris van Bern, who says I wheedled him out of it; Yamamoto sends a suit case; Clarkson a fine and large dressing case, all fitted and complete; Tom Branson, of Hastings, W. D. Chipchase, Miss Alice Raymond, R. G. Knowles, Miss Marie Kendall, Fred Griffiths, and Chirgwin, who, besides giving prizes, have bought a lot of tickets, are all helping on the good work. F. V. St. Clair and several others have sworn to sell all their tickets or perish in the attempt. The Era prize is a thing of beauty—two things, in fact. Wish I could win 'em; and I really haven't the time to mention now everyone helping, though I should like to.

One thing I would like to say to those who have had tickets sent to them. Don't send them all back if you can help it without just a little "bob" or two to soften the blow. And, then, there's no particular hurry. There's time to sell a few, anyhow, between now and the 21st. The Ladies' Guild Committee will again help us by taking charge of the programmes on the day. Oh, and finally, there are still a few pages of the programme to let for advertisements. And what a chance! My word if I catch you not advertising in it! Thank you, Mr. Editor. Good day.—Yours truly,

CHARLES COBORN.

P.S.—I nearly forgot to mention that the Great Lafayette has sent a splendid donation; that Mr. M. H. Hills, of Stanningley, is sending a fine travelling hamper (with his very own patent double lock), to keep the White Brothers' prize company; also that George Mozart is sending us a prize. More next week, if you will stand it. Honest Injun, I don't know what we should do without you newspaper chaps.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT FOR ACTOR AND COMPOSER.
By ALBERT A. STRONG, LL.B. (Lond.).
Mr. A. A. Strong has published a book on "The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer," which should be in the hands of everyone who is obliged to know about this perplexing subject. Dramatic copyright in England is in a particularly unsatisfactory state, and it is much to be hoped that ere long some more rational method of securing protection for a play may be devised than the slovenly and sometimes costly "production for copyright purposes" which is at present required. — St. James's Gazette.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT FOR ACTOR AND COMPOSER.
By ALBERT A. STRONG, LL.B. (Lond.).

Chapter I.
Chapter II.
PERFORMING RIGHT.
Chapter III.
MUSICAL COPYRIGHT.
Chapter V.

Copyright confusion is like the poor, always with us, and as it seems likely to remain so until at least the crack of doom, it were well for all concerned, or likely to be concerned, to take immediate steps to secure a copy of Mr. Albert A. Strong's new work, entitled "The Law of Copyright." Mr. Strong is already favourably known to the profession for his textbook on "Dramatic and Musical Law," which, like his latest production, is published at "The Era" office. "The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer" essays to make clear to the non-legal mind what is—or, in some cases what probably is—the law as to musical and dramatic copyright. The chapters on the Berne Convention and on the Chase Act, passed by the United States Congress last March, are full of interest.—Referee.

"The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer," by Albert A. Strong, LL.B., solicitor, author of "Dramatic and Musical Law" ("The Era" office), seems to be the one compendious and indispensable authority on the subject, as vexed as the "Bermoothes" and as tortuous as a Chancery suit, that has long been wanted. It is in every essential a text book for the perplexed layman, and no solicitor or barrister worth his salt ought to think of taking or appearing in "proceedings" without consulting its pages. It must suffice, after what has been said, to state little more than that the contents include five chapters, respectively named "Copyright as Opposed to Performing Right," "Performing Right," "Infringement and Remedies," "Musical Copyright," and "International and Colonial Copyright." The work, for all its precise authority, is not dry reading. The statutes, with the elucidatory notes, necessarily impose a task on the reader which takes some tackling, but they had to be there. The cases adduced, however, are full of interest. Certain of them might fitly find a place in the romance of copyright. There was the fight of Charles Reade with George Conquest over "It's Never Too Late to Mend" for instance, and the equally interesting conflict of Mr. J. A. Cave with Chatterton over "The Wandering Jew." The latter was a famous battle. Chatterton took it to the House of Lords, and was finally beaten, to the unspeakable relief of Mr. Cave, who is never weary of relating the story. Had the result been otherwise, it would have meant his ruin. I well remember meeting him on the day of his victory and "crashing a cup with him" in honour of the same. "The Law of Copyright" is dedicated to Mr. A. W. Pinero.—Sportsman.

ART AND BUSINESS.

The recent success of the revolt by the society known as the National Theatres Owners' Association against the monopoly held by the Theatrical Trust of America must have delighted all in England who have the real interests of our stage at heart. We are not in the least prejudiced against the Trust. We have heard both managers and artists speak highly of the convenience of making arrangements through one great monopolising medium strong enough to be despotic, and absolutely business-like and reliable. There is a very natural temptation to enjoy such convenience without considering the injury eventually done by it to dramatic art in general.

All art has its business side. The artist has to live, and often finds it impossible to do so without "pot-boiling." But it is too often forgotten that, the necessities of life once supplied, the pleasure of art work is greater to the artist than anything that its monetary reward can purchase. Of course, there are all grades and degrees of the art-impulse. There are hewers of wood and drawers of water in all arts, and they must not be expected to have the same feelings as the aristocracy of their craft. But whatever worthy work is done in any art—and particularly the art of the theatre—is not done for bread alone. There is an old-fashioned word which defined the motive power of the actor in the last generation; it was described as "the desire of Fame." To enjoy the affectionate admiration of one's fellow creatures was, and is, though discretion may conceal it, the impulse which makes people leave their fathers' businesses and become, through poverty, hardship, and anxiety, painters, sculptors, dramatists, and actors.

And, therefore, by a curious paradox, the more unbusinesslike are the professors of an art the better business is done in it. The pictures which sell for such large sums now were painted by artists who were fanatically attached to their work and not particular about their wages. (This, of course, does not mean that geniuses are imbecile in money dealings, but simply that they are not thinking of big cheques when they are painting their pictures, however they may haggle afterwards.) The artistic temperament, which is so much talked of is often made the excuse for many eccentricities, but seldom for meanness or avarice. The extravagance which often attaches to it is merely an exaggeration of the instinct that the one thing needful is the art itself, and that material considerations are secondary. An artist does not do a better portrait for £300 than he formerly did for £30; he does his best in every case. Most actors would rather play Hamlet at a West End Theatre at a low salary than—even if it were possible for them to do so—be a super at a third-rate playhouse at enormous wages.

It is sometimes stated that everything can be bought at a price; but this does not hold good of high art. An advertisement offering wealth beyond the dreams of avarice to a dramatist equal in ability to Sir A. W. PINERO, or an actor equal to the late Sir HENRY IRVING, would meet with no satisfactory reply. Genius is not to be had for the asking, or even by paying heavily for it. The high price of rubber is due not to the large amount of money available for its purchase, but to the small quantity of rubber which is on sale in the world.

All the instruction-books on acting and playwriting are based on the supposition that genius can be artificially created. It can only be cultivated. A manufactured article sooner or later becomes wearisome. The success of the music halls in the provinces is chiefly due to the spontaneousness of the art offered at them. The slump at some of the provincial theatres may be attributed to the fact that the attractions offered were, in many cases, mechanical.

At the same time, we cannot go as far as Mr. H. A. JONES did in his speech at the Oxford Union the other day, when he said that "serious drama in London has no hold whatever upon the public." That there is a public for serious drama as there is a public for frivolous plays, the success of any really strong piece proves. The real difficulty is the dearth of great dramatists and extraordinary actors and actresses. It is not correct to attribute the former shortcoming to the fact that literary men will not take the trouble to "learn" the craft of playwriting. The truth is, good dramatists, like really fine novelists, are born, not made. How it happens that one type of intellect is born to see art through the medium of the printed book and another through that of the footlights we do not know. But the "first pieces" with which Sir A. W. PINERO and Mr. H. A. JONES made their débuts as dramatic authors were as technically excellent as their later and greater achievements.

All, then, that can be done to assist dramatic art to develop itself is to cultivate its germs. And this certainly is being done in England at present. What with our Stage Society, our Rehearsal Theatre performances, our Play Actors, and the generally "open mind" of our managers, it seems impossible that any aspirant of genius should be crushed by the impossibility of production. The real enemy of the English stage is the new philosophy. The British public is composed of two sections—a small one which is agitated by social problems, and a large one which is, so to speak, in a state of nature. Most of the writing and talking power is on the side of the first contingent; most of the money and a vast preponderance of numbers are on the side of the latter. Many of our cleverest young dramatists are tainted with the new philosophy. They are not strong enough to be IBSENS, and to be PINEROS they are—so they say—ashamed. The result is that we have to go to Paris for strong dramas which are at the same time not sermons on Socialism or pessimist protests against society. But all this intellectual yeast will in time "simmer down"; and then our advanced aspirants will make, let us hope, practical dramatists, as able and efficient as Mr. SOMERSET MAUGHAM. We must not, however, expect the long runs of old days; they were a symptom of a time when there were fewer idols to worship. The entertainment which avowedly appeals to the sensuous, the frivolous, and the comical side of human nature will always enjoy long runs, though it may be observed that there are only two pieces of this kind at present enjoying long runs in London. Managers will no longer be able to rest from anxiety for a twelvemonth without a change of bill. But the old-fashioned long runs were objectionable to both actors and actor-managers, except as providing the "sinews of war" for a new enterprise. As it is, the condition of the English stage is far more hopeful than that of the stage in America. The result of a purely commercial view of the drama may have made fortunes for a few capitalists, but it has certainly been bad for acting and dramatic art generally. America, once fertile in great actors, the native country of BOOTH, FORREST, and DAVENPORT, has produced few, if any, actors of the highest eminence lately, and scarcely any dramatists of genius. We export ideas and individuals to the United States, taking in return the tribute-money, which often helps to make up deficiencies caused by the misfortune or unlucky enterprise in England. The whole idea of a commercial monopoly is unfavourable to originality, ambition, and aspiration. It tends to reduce managers, authors, and actors and actresses to a submissive flock, satisfied with ease and subordination, and only interested in obtaining the almighty dollar. We are glad on principle to see the idea successfully opposed.

A GRATIFYING ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Mr. Will Edwardes-Sprange has received the following acknowledgment of a poem sent to H.M. the Queen-Mother Alexandra:—

[COPY.]

"Buckingham Palace, July 2, 1910.

"Miss Knollys is commanded by Queen Alexandra to thank Mr. Edwardes-Sprange most sincerely for his kind sympathy and touching verses."

Yet never contrast so complete, the air

The regal golden noon shone down upon
An Empire vast, with one heart sorrowing,
For he, the King, the man of men, was gone:
Its friend as well as King!

The sad-faced millions all have gone their way:
Their hearts at sympathy were all as one
With thine that anguished day.

Thou all-beloved Queen-Mother, may the Power
Which took from thee and us our gracious King
Illume the darkness of the awful hour,
And ease its aching sting.

And now, wholeheartedly, give we his son
Such trust and loyalty as shall not cease
Till life itself be done.

We are not all bereaved, though sore bereft,
Since Heaven hath pleased our Edward to remove,
For Britain's sons their Mother-Queen have left
To reverence and to love.

"I did my duty." Were there truer phrase
From him, whose whole life was in duty spent,

And healing Time hath brought its balm to thee,

THE "BULLOCK VERSION."

In the Bill Chamber of the Court of Session on Wednesday there was presented to Lord Dewar a note of suspension and interdict by John Pitt Hardacre, Staines, Surrey, who asked that Richard Waldon, proprietor and manager of the Royal Princess Theatre, Glasgow, should be interdicted from producing or causing to be produced a drama which is the original adaptation to the stage of Mrs. Henry Woods' novel "East Lynne," and which is known as the East Lynne Bullock Version. Interdict was also asked against the respondent producing or causing to be produced any version of the drama copied or only colourably altered from the drama, the copyright of which belongs to the complainer. East Lynne was written in 1861. Prior to March 16, 1866, John Coleman Chute wrote a drama, the principal incidents of which were taken from the novel. Being of opinion that a play taken entirely from the novel would be too sad and dull to suit the taste of playgoers, Mr. Chute introduced the character of John Bullock, the comic policeman. On June 23, 1888, Mr. Chute assigned all the acting rights in the drama to the complainer, and he was registered as proprietor with the sole liberty of representation or performance. The complainer averred that during the week beginning April 25 last the respondent produced at the Royal Princess Theatre the "Bullock" version of East Lynne, or a version thereof only colourably altered from the "Bullock" version, and on the ground that that production was an infringement of his rights the complainer asked interdict. In the respondent's programme "Bullock" appeared as "Policeman X Rays," and the actor personating that character was known by the stage name of "X Rays." In other respects the drama as produced by the respondent was said to be identical with that belonging to the complainer. This state of matters was not due to any ignorance on the part of the respondent, as the complainer's rights have been frequently declared by the courts in England and Scotland.

In his answers the respondent stated that he, like many others, dramatised a version of "East Lynne," and that he had been representing his version on the stage for the last twenty-four years. In it the policeman is called "Policeman X-Rays." During the week beginning April 25 that drama was produced at the Royal Princess Theatre. It was admitted that one of the actors at his own hand instructed the policeman to add a few words in addition to what was contained in the respondent's version, but nothing attracted the respondent's attention until the present action was served. The matter being thus brought to his notice, the respondent at once took the policeman out of the play, and on the Friday and Saturday it was given without that character appearing. The theatre was closed on April 30 for the season. The respondent disclaimed any intention to encroach upon the complainer's rights or to adapt anything from his special form of the drama, and gave an undertaking not to do so. It was maintained that the complainer's statements were insufficient to support the conclusions of the action, and that the respondents' drama being in no fair sense a copy or colourable imitation of the complainer's version the action should be dismissed.

Mr. Stevenson, for the respondent, explained that his friend (Mr. Morton, for the complainer), claimed the sole right to put a comic policeman in the play. The respondent's policeman was also a comic policeman. He had lodged a tender in which in full of the complainer's claims he undertook that he would not at any time without licence from the complainers produce the Bullock policeman part of the copyright version, and he also undertook that he would not produce any of the other portions of the play which the complainer could specify as special to his copyright.

His Lordship.—You have a drama of your own?

Mr. Stevenson.—There are several.

His Lordship.—Has your drama a policeman in it?

Mr. Morton (interjecting): Oh, yes; it has.

Mr. Stevenson said he understood there were several dramas, with this difference, that there was a comic policeman in his friend's drama. His friend claimed the right to put the comic policeman in this part. "I think our policeman was also a comic policeman," counsel continued. He asked the Court to dismiss the note as in view of his tender there was nothing else in the suspension. The respondent was willing that interdict should pass in terms of the tender. He also tendered a small sum and expenses.

Counsel submitted the following letter, which had been sent by the respondent to the complainer on April 29:—

"My Dear Hardacre,—I am surprised at what you have done this morning. I did not think from the friendly relations that have always existed between us that you would have so acted towards me. You know my old version of East Lynne, which I have played for twenty-four years, is not the 'Bullock version,' nor does my manuscript contain any of the dialogue which your policeman speaks. If any of my artists have inadvertently spoken in a mistake (through, perhaps, having played with you in your version) any dialogue they have previously studied, it has been against my wishes. I would not encroach upon anyone's rights. 'Twas not my intention to play East Lynne this week, but I was left in a hole by a company who failed to come here, and in order to keep the theatre open (as other managers have to do sometimes) I had to fall back upon my old version. Really, old chap, I have done you no harm, and I think you ought to act at once upon my assurance that the lines complained of have been immediately excised, and, in fact, although there is a policeman in the novel by Mrs. Wood, I have at once, to show you my bona fides, and how unimportant such a figure is in my version, and, further, old friend, to even please and satisfy you I have taken the super policeman right out, so that no figure of a policeman is seen at all. Therefore, I ask you to stop, squash, and prevent any further steps being taken in any such law case occurring between you and myself."

Mr. Morton moved the Court to pass the note for the trial of the case. He said he wanted to go on with the closed record to show from examination of both versions that in point of fact the version that had been played at Glasgow was an infringement. Did the respondent intend to have no policeman in his play?

Lord Dewar said that at this preliminary stage he thought the complainer had made out enough, and the respondent had admitted so much as to lead to the note being passed for the trial of the case. His Lordship accordingly passed the note. Counsel for complainer: Mr. Lyon Mackenzie and Mr. Morton; Agent, Mr. Norman M. Macpherson, S.S.C. The counsel for respondent was Mr. Stevenson; Agents, Messrs. Auld and Macdonald, W.S.

A THEATRE at Nancy which for the past six years has been devoted to periodical productions of the Passion Play, will this year stage Jeanne d'Arc. Four hundred actors will figure in the piece. The play is a succession of scenes, starting with Joan of Arc's mission received at Domrémy, and ending at the stake at Rouen. The march of the fugitives, the appearance of the saints, the gratitude of the king at Chinon, the capture of Tourelles, the triumphal entry into Orleans, the coronation of the king at Rheims, the stage at Rouen, and the apotheosis are all realistically represented. The elaborate spectacle has been organised in the interests of charity.

SHAKESPEAREAN DISCOVERIES.

Sir Edwin Durning-Lawrence, speaking on "The Real Shakespeare, of Stratford-on-Avon, Gentleman, and the New Discoveries," at the annual meeting of the Bacon Society on the 30th ult., said that Dr. Wallace's recent discoveries had really told us more about the Stratford householder than the whole of our previous knowledge. First, they proved beyond cavil that William Shakespeare, of Stratford-on-Avon, gentleman, was totally unable to write so much as one letter of his own name, for while one other signature to interrogatories was signed by the witness, Shakespeare's signature was composed of three little dots, his name being written by the Law Clerk. Sir Edwin then analysed this supposed signature, comparing it with the five signatures said to be authentic. He threw facsimiles of them on the screen, saying that analysis proved that Shakespeare never wrote any of them—for the all-important and the only sufficient reason that he could not write. He had examined the purchase deed and the mortgage deed in the British Museum said to contain the signatures. Neither of the deeds said it was "signed"—only "sealed"—and it was not at that time necessary that such deeds should be signed. The names were written in the law script of the time, while the signatures of the other two parties to the deeds were in ordinary script. Similarly the signatures on the will were in law script. No signatures of Shakespeare existed. All were written in good law script by clever penmen, and were widely different. If William Shakespeare never did and never could write his name the controversy was closed, and the Shakespeare myth must at once and for ever disappear. The true story was that eleven plays had been brought out anonymously, when in consequence of political exigencies it was absolutely necessary that a name should be attached to them. Bacon had used the name William Shakespeare for his "Venus and Adonis" in 1593 and for his "Rape of Lucrece" in 1594. An extremely insignificant person, known as Shaks or Shaksper, was found who, for the then very large sum of £1,000, was willing to take the risk of being imprisoned and so forth. Accordingly, in 1597, New Place was purchased for him, and he was sent away to Stratford-on-Avon. Then, and then only, was the name of "Shakespeare" attached for the first time to a play, Love's Labours Lost, and immediately thereafter it was stated that the eleven other plays and also the poems were by the same person. When Shakespeare went back to Stratford no play had borne his name, and probably no one in London connected the name Shakespeare with the Shaks, the hanger-on at the theatre. There never was a Shakespeare's company of actors, and Shakespeare never was a manager of any theatre, neither was he ever an actor of repute. The leading Stratfordians only claimed two of the existing portraits as authentic—the Stratford bust and the engraving in the First Folio, 1623. Every Baconian ought to know that in 1904 Mrs. C. Carmichael Stopes, who was not a Baconian, proved that the Stratford bust could not have been in existence in its present form till about 130 years after Shakespeare's death. The other "authentic" portrait was that of a cleverly-contrived dummy purposely prepared with a sham doublet, left-handed, and a mask, to teach those capable of understanding that the name "Wm. Shakespeare" was a mere left hand, a mask or pseudonym for the real author, the wonder and mystery of all ages, the man known to them under the name of Francis Bacon.

Mrs. C. Carmichael Stopes could not accept Sir Edwin's conclusions. She claimed to be the only person alive who had been through the signatures at the Record Office and at Stratford-on-Avon. She agreed that they were written by a Law Clerk, but as that was then customary she did not accept that as evidence that Shakespeare was illiterate.

THE FIRST THEATRE IN RHODESIA.

It is interesting to note en passant that Miss Florence Imeson, the talented exponent of Our Miss Gibbs, &c., in South Africa (for Messrs. George Edwardes and F. and B. Wheeler's company), had the pleasure to play aforementioned part on Monday, May 30, 1910, at the opening of Messrs. Wheeler's fine theatre, which is the first theatre ever erected in Bulawayo, Rhodesia. After this performance six of the principals, including Miss Imeson, were entertained to supper to commemorate this red-letter day in the annals of this far-distant outpost of our Empire in tropical Africa, on the site of which only twenty years ago Lobengula's mealies were growing.

After a two weeks' engagement in this mushroom city Bulawayo, Miss F. Imeson and the chief members of the company left for the Victoria Falls, 280 miles north-west of Bulawayo, on the Zambesi River, the eighth wonder of the world. These Falls are 400ft. high and 1,900yds. wide (as long as from Marble Arch to Tottenham Court-road), two and a half times as high and twice as broad as Niagara, U.S.A.

The native races very appropriately named these Falls "Mosi-oa-tunya" ("smoke that sounds"), as the spray therefrom at full flood ascends to 3,000ft.

These musical-comedy artists gave a concert at the hotel one and a half miles from the Victoria Falls, and are some of the first, if not the first, entertainers who have ever performed there—1,442 miles from Cape Town.

Miss Imeson's tour of South Africa has been a succession of triumphs in every city she has visited, and the Johannesburg Star dubbed her "the best artist yet associated with musical comedy in South Africa."

She may return to England next September, and we truly hope she may here secure the gilt-edged engagements such talent as hers so richly deserves.

OPEN-AIR PLAYS.

On Monday Mr. Harcourt-Williams opened a series of performances at Hayesleigh School, Old Trafford, Manchester, with As You Like It. In the grounds of this establishment there is a pretty piece of greensward which makes an admirable field of operations, fringed as it is so naturally in the rear by a clump of shrubbery, enabling the artists to make most effective entrances from the borders of the copse or exits into its heart.

The performance began at the second act, and went right on without interval. As the dusk set in, limelight thrown from the back of the spectators' gallery heightened the beauty of the scene. Miss Jean Sterling Mackinlay made a charming Rosalind. The ease and naturalness of her acting was accentuated by an exquisite modulation of voice. In the lighter phases of the character she struck the right note of mirth; in the more pathetic passages her delivery was marked by rare tenderness. Her enunciation of the epilogue was spirited. The Orlando of Mr. Harcourt-Williams was a happy piece of work. In the affecting scene where Orlando procures relief for the distressed Adam Mr. Harcourt-Williams's delineation was one of simple dignity. The Jaques of Mr. Clarence Derwent was a finished attempt, and Mr. A. G. Onslow sang the songs of Amiens with good effect. Mr. Wilfred Beckwith proved an able Duke; and Mr. Herbert Dansey played Touchstone with no lack of energy. The rôles of Corin and Silvius were in the safe hands of Mr. Alfred A. Harris and Mr. H. Scott Sunderland respectively. Celia had a piquant exponent in Miss Jean Gregor, Audrey being well placed with Miss Margaret Bussé. A string orchestra added to the pleasure of an excellent performance, for which all arrangements were made by Mr. Alexander Cassy, the general manager.

AN UNNECESSARY CASE.

In the Nisi Prius Court of the Lancaster Assizes on July 1, Denis Lyndon, an actor and stage-manager, residing at Hackney, formerly in the employ of Mr. Harry Benet, sometime proprietor of The Lady Slavey and other companies, brought an action against Calvert Routledge, proprietor of His Majesty's Theatre, Barrow, to recover damages for alleged slander, uttered at Barrow on Nov. 9, 1909. Mr. Cavanagh was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Settle for the defence.

The plaintiff said he had been engaged in the theatrical profession for twelve years, for nine or ten years of which he had been a stage-manager, lastly with The Lady Slavey company, of which Mr. Henry Benet was the proprietor, at a salary of £5 weekly. In November last the company was engaged at His Majesty's Theatre, Barrow, and on Nov. 9, at the termination of the first act, the defendant came round to the stage while plaintiff was superintending the setting of the scenery for the second act, and made a complaint that the curtain had been down too great a length of time. Plaintiff said his orders were not to "ring up" in less than twenty minutes. Mr. Routledge said, "I will see it is done," and witness said, "I shall see that my orders are carried out." There had previously been no altercation between defendant and himself. After the performance he saw Mr. Routledge talking to Mr. Lister Mara, the general-manager of the travelling company, and the latter asked him if he had any complaint to make, and he said, "Yes, against the gentleman who is playing the Major," a character undertaken by the witness. Defendant repeated the assertion that he considered plaintiff incompetent, and refused either to withdraw or apologise, and later on in the property-room defendant said he considered plaintiff was "absolutely incompetent," whereupon witness said he should put the matter in the hands of his solicitor. Since last February witness had not been able to secure another engagement, and this he attributed to Mr. Routledge's statement having "gone the rounds" of the profession.

Cross-examined by Mr. Settle: He agreed that a manager of a theatre had a right to criticise a company, and he should not complain of it unless he considered it improper. He simply obeyed orders, and rang the curtain up within the proper time. If the audience shouted and "booed" it would not make any difference to him; he obeyed orders. If there was an undue delay it tended to damage the theatre.

His Lordship: And the proprietor of the theatre is entitled to remonstrate; of course, plaintiff says there was no undue delay.

Mr. Kingsley, who was "in front of the house" for Mr. Benet at Barrow, gave evidence, and said defendant came to him and said plaintiff was incompetent, and also said one could not expect to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear.

Mr. Lister Mara, the stage-director of Mr. Benet's company, stated when he asked Mr. Routledge whether he considered Lyndon incompetent Mr. Routledge affirmed that he did, and would not withdraw.

Cross-examined: Witness was rather excited, especially as Mr. Routledge attacked his (witness's) character.

Mr. Harry Benet and two members of the company followed, and said they heard Mr. Routledge utter the expression as to Mr. Lyndon's incompetency.

Mr. Calvert Routledge stated that he was colessee with his wife of His Majesty's Theatre, and had been for five years. He had a long knowledge as actor and manager, and his wife had also had a long experience. It was the custom of the resident-manager to criticise the travelling company, and occasionally the travelling company criticised the local management. After The Lady Slavey company had been engaged and appeared at Barrow, Mr. Kingsley, the acting-manager for Mr. Benet, asked that the curtain should go up later than the advertised time, and it was arranged that the curtain should go up at 7.45, and that the interval between the acts should be a quarter of an hour. On Monday the interval was twenty-seven minutes, and on Tuesday the same, but on Wednesday, after he had complained, this was shortened to eighteen minutes. There was a great noise in the auditorium on the Monday night because of the length of time the curtain was down, and he went on the stage and spoke to Lyndon, who replied that he would do as he liked. On Tuesday he warned Kingsley that the interval must not be so long as it was the previous night. Kingsley said, "The stage-manager says he cannot possibly do it in less time." Witness replied, "All I can say is that the stage-manager must be inadequate." He never said Lyndon was no good or anything of that sort. Later in the evening there was a great noise amongst the company, and the barmaid, Miss Wilson, asked them to cease using filthy language. Mara and the plaintiff were in a most excited condition, and threats against witness were used. Witness said he never had the slightest malice against plaintiff. They threatened to have "what money he had got," and "fill in his eye." He had never heard the latter expression before; he had heard of "banging up" the eye.

Cross-examined by Mr. Cavanagh: He had known of cases in London where a curtain was down for twenty minutes, and the fact was advertised on the programme, but a London audience would stand more than a provincial audience. The stage-manager could have had the curtain up quicker, but he purposely kept it down because the play had been so cut down that it would not run a sufficient time. He was responsible to the public for the proper conduct of the theatre. The plaintiff asked him to withdraw what he had said, and witness said, "I shall withdraw nothing." He suggested that the witnesses who supported plaintiff had simply remained behind to hear what he was likely to say.

Mrs. Routledge, wife of defendant, said that on the Tuesday she heard Mr. Routledge say the curtain must not remain down at the interval longer than fifteen minutes, and Mr. Kingsley said the stage-manager said it could not be done in less than twenty-five minutes. In the evening the gentlemen concerned used the most fearful language she had ever heard in her life. The next morning Mr. Benet said she must not take any notice of Mr. Lyndon, because he had Indian blood in his veins.

His Lordship, in summing up, asked the jury to decide (1) did the defendant use words which were defamatory to the plaintiff; (2) was he actuated by any improper or indirect motive; and (3) what were the damages.

The jury returned an answer in the affirmative to the first question, no to the second; damages one farthing, without costs. The jury, through the foreman, said the case should never have been brought, and the Judge agreed.

As the result of the united efforts of several influential Widnes gentlemen, the twenty-first year of Mr. James Kiddie's management of the Alexandra Theatre, Widnes, has been fittingly recognised. A testimonial fund and complimentary benefit performance, which the Mayor (Councillor T Smith) engineered, were organised, the latter being held a week or two ago. Meanwhile, the testimonial fund had been kept going, and the result of both movements was seen on Tuesday evening, when Mr. Kiddie was made the recipient of a cheque to the value of £70. The presentation was made at the Railway and Commercial Hotel, by the Mayor of Widnes, who referred in eulogistic terms to the services Mr. Kiddie had given to Widnes in amusement catering and all charitable movements. A supper was held, and many artists contributed to the success of the evening.

VARIETY GOSSIP.

Mr. H. H. Wells has been appointed Chairman of the Board of Directors of the London Pavilion in succession to the late Mr. Hugh Astley. Mr. Lord, of the firm of Newson-Smith, Mills and Co., has been nominated a director of the company.

Benzoline is the favourite beverage of Captain Spalding, a "regular fire-eater," who as a baby toyed with live coal. Some years ago at the smaller halls a gentleman of small wit used to sing "You can't eat coke," but Spalding is very partial to molten lead and burning sealing-wax, and varies the monotony of life by licking red-hot pokers. In time we may see this fireproof phenomenon at the halls.

Sunday, July 17, is the date arranged for the motor run of the Grand Order of Water Rats to Brighton. Mr. Harry Tate is again organiser-in-chief, and has secured the support of Sir William Treloar, Bart., and of other leading lights in the motoring world. Those who would like to be beside the seaside are timed to start from the Vaudeville Club at 11 a.m., and lunch will be taken at the Royal Albion Hotel, Brighton. The up-river outing of the Water Rats has been fixed for Sunday, August 7.

The Paragon was reopened on Monday last by the Brothers Jacobs (late of the Wonderland), after having been redecorated throughout in red and white. The prices of admission are greatly lowered, and the programme consists of Bioscope Pictures, variety turns, and the Jewish actor Mr. Waxman in The Revolutionist. The people in the surrounding district have taken advantage of the cheap seats, for on the evening of our visit the house was absolutely packed.

Another unique attraction has been secured by Mr. Oswald Stoll for the London Hippodrome, and it will be shown on Monday next. It is known as "The Eagle and the Girl," and while America declared it to be "the most startling act in all vaudeville," France and Germany have been fascinated by its charm and novelty. The Eagle is a large white bird with lambent green eyes, and, flapping its wings, it soars over the heads of the spectators, carrying with it a pretty girl in white, who sings as she floats round the house.

Save for the illuminated eyes of the plainly-seen Eagle and for small electric lamps which light up the lady's face the auditorium is in darkness, and the floating girl and bird far up in the air are at once beautiful and mystifying. They both vanish suddenly from sight, and instantly the theatre lights are turned on, but there is no sign or trace of the eagle or the girl. The question London will be asking itself next week is: "However can that enormous white eagle be made to fly gently round the edge of the circle and immediately over the stalls bearing in its talons a self-possessed young lady?" In addition to "The Eagle and the Girl," next week's newcomers to this house include Miss Helen Trix, the American comedienne, and Farr and Farland, comedians.

All booking business for the halls controlled by the United County Theatres, Ltd., viz., the Palace, Plymouth; the Grand Theatre, Stonehouse; the Palace, Bristol; the King's Theatre, Gateshead; the Palace, Aberdeen; the King's Theatre, Dundee; and the Hippodrome, Devonport, is now conducted from the head offices of the company at Broadmead House, Panton-street, Haymarket, and all communications relative to the same should be addressed to Mr. Herbert Taylor, booking department.

The numerous friends and admirers of Mr. George Bastow will be pleased to hear that the comedian is entirely recovered from his long illness, and feels and looks fit and well. He will get into harness again on the 18th inst., opening at the Palace, Douglas, I.O.M., his répertoire including new numbers, by himself and Fred W. Leigh, entitled "Captain Ginjah," "Hey John! Ho, John!" and "Dang ee politics." He will also sing his admired song, "They won't know I coom from the coontry."

Mr. Fred Farren, as an exponent of wordless paris, has been trained in the best traditions, and his work at the Empire has stamped him as a very fine pantomimist. His many friends, therefore, will be interested to hear that there is a possibility of seeing him in a petite emotional drama of gesture, which has been written by Mr. Laurence Housman, part author of Prunella; or, Love in a Dutch Garden, so that daintiness and charm are sure to be the distinguishing features of the production, with which Mr. Farren is delighted. Pierrot and Pierrette are the only characters in the piece, written on much the same lines as L'Enfant Prodigue, which, it will be remembered, was brightened by the genius of Mlle. Jane May and enjoyed much favour at the Prince of Wales's and Criterion Theatres in 1891-92.

Mr. Farren, we hope, will be able to produce the little work at the Empire, with Miss Beatrice Collier in the rôle of Pierrette. She has been his artistic comrade in several Empire successes, and there is no doubt that she possesses the dramatic fibre and eloquent expressiveness so necessary to the impersonation of silent heroines. The Apache Dance—so sensational and yet so dramatic—revealed the power of Miss Collier, who, we feel sure, would welcome a greater opportunity of showing that miming is not a lost art in this country. The music of the piece is by Mr. Dalhousie Young, a composer as yet unknown to fame.

Mr. Wentworth Croke's own version of East Lynne is booked for a run of sixteen weeks in the London halls of the Gibbons Circuit—that is, from Monday next until Oct. 20. In a chat with Phœbus, of the Daily Express, Mr. Croke, speaking of his adaptation of the forty-year-old novel, says: "I call it a tabloid drama in seven scenes, and it plays twenty-eight minutes. This is what they want in the halls—good solid drama. You can cut out your comedy. Audiences want relief from comedy. There is not a line of it in this East Lynne. I want the tears—and 'tears' are as safe an appeal in the halls as in the theatre. I give them the bed-rock story of East Lynne. There is not a laugh in it."

Mr. Arthur Bourchier takes an entirely opposite view to Mr. Croke. After his recent experience at the Palace in that powerful little playlet The Knife, he reverted to pure comedy with A Marriage Has Been Arranged, and expressed the opinion that variety audiences should be treated to light fare, and not have their feelings shocked with tragedy or their hearts wrung by anything of a sorrowful nature. The entertainment should be joyous, and evoke the sunshine of a universal smile.

Another West End manager, whom we found carefully and conscientiously going through about five one-act plays of a heavy character, informed us that he had counselled his directors to accept only pieces of a light nature for production at an important London hall situate in the heart of the West End. From personal observation of the attitude of less sophisticated crowds in the houses of the outer metropolitan area towards drama of the domestic type we should be inclined to back Mr. Croke's opinion that there is a big public for the drama of tears, and if a "good cry" is not relished in Shaftesbury-avenue it is much enjoyed in Balham or Brixton.

The concluding games of the Glasgow Theatrical and Vaudeville Football League have now been played, and premier honours in the competition have been gained by the Pavilion, with the Empire second, and the Metropole third. Mr. Evan Good, general manager at the Pavilion, is naturally highly pleased at the success of his team.

Mr. Harry Lauder was entertained on Thursday, the 30th ult., at an informal little luncheon in the Grosvenor Restaurant, Glasgow, under the auspices of the Scottish Musical Artists' Benevolent Fund.

Seated to the right of the chairman—Mr. W. F. Frame, "the man you know"—the guest of the day related his experiences in America in interesting fashion. Although he kept his face as solemn as a judge, there was a twinkle in his eye which showed the inward laughter.

Wullie Frame proposed Harry's health in a racy speech, claiming him as one of themselves—one of the fund. They all knew the deep interest their chief guest had taken in the work of the fund. Just to show how it was prospering, he need only point out that they began with a cypher not so long ago, and now their funds totalled £1,200. They were all pleased, concluded the cheery chairman, to see that their friend Harry was just as sensible, as free, and as genuine as in the old days.

On Saturday last a special matinée was devoted to a complimentary benefit to Mr. Frank Weston, acting-manager of the Hippodrome, Birkenhead, whose tact and geniality have established him a great favourite. A splendid programme included the support of practically the pick of the artists appearing at the Birkenhead and Liverpool halls, and a crowded house was naturally the result

Some years ago Mr. Gus Lazenberg opened a picture hall in the Bridgeton district of Glasgow. From its opening night it proved a most successful venture, and this success prompted Mr. Lazenberg to look around for new worlds to conquer. He settled on Partick as the most suitable point of vantage, and a hall was secured in the centre of the populous suburb. He has had the interior tastefully decorated, the stage much improved, and tip-up chairs established, the result being a very comfortable hall.

On Saturday last the Press and a number of friends had a private view, when Mr. Lazenberg explained that it was his intention to run the place more as a variety show with two or three pictures in between.

Bailie Hogg welcomed Mr. Lazenberg to Partick on behalf of the Corporation, and said a hall of the kind worked on good lines should do splendid business. An admirable programme was carried through by several artists, after which refreshments were served. On Monday the hall was opened to the public, when a large audience enjoyed the performance immensely.

The Tower Pavilion, Portobello, has recently concluded a long season as a skating rink. During the past two weeks the building has been closed for alterations, and re-opens to-day (Saturday) as an up-to-date picture and variety hall. The concern will be under the guidance of Mr. Harry Marvello, the original founder of the building, and his great popularity in this famous seaside resort spells success to the new venture. A warm welcome awaits Mr. Marvello after his absence of eighteen months.

Some surprise having been expressed at the fact that the Birmingham Hippodrome is closed for this week, an inquiry at the theatre on Monday elicited the information that the building had been closed in order to carry out the work of redecoration. Mr. Edmund Beech, secretary to the Hippodrome Company, told our representative that they were only going to close for a week or so to do certain repairs. The hall would probably be opened on Monday next, but the exact date was not definitely decided.

The New Theatre of Varieties at Northampton, the plans of which have just been approved by the authorities, will be erected from the designs of that eminent theatre architect Mr. W. G. R. Sprague. The house will occupy a fine frontage of about 90ft. to Abingdon-street, with a depth of about 180ft., and will be practically isolated. There will be accommodation for nearly 3,000 persons, and the building, planned throughout on the most modern lines, will be luxuriously decorated, furnished, and fitted with all up-to-date details. Building operations will commence forthwith.

As is generally known, the grounds of the Tower, New Brighton, are illuminated at various parts by tall arc lamps, and the globe of one of these, just outside the theatre, has in some way been damaged, enabling a couple of linnets to build their nest inside. The other evening, after the current had been turned on, a spark from the carbon fell on the nest, and it was completely destroyed, but the daring birds, nothing daunted, promptly built another. In this are now four eggs. The management have decided not to light the lamp again until the eggs are hatched. The globe is taken down twice daily and shown to visitors. The remarkable thing is, that the birds have not been scared by the brilliant light which has shone every evening a few inches from their comfortable-looking but strange nesting-place.

Fresh from his successful season at the Crystal and Alexandra Palaces, London, Mr. F. J. Connor brings a strong company to Douglas, where he opened on Monday to a large and delighted audience. Mr. F. J. Connor is a most popular entrepreneur. He has a large and loyal clientèle, and his clever children (Mona and Douglas Connor) are not only great favourites, but are expert and daring riders. They secure the most enthusiastic applause, and thoroughly deserve it. All the items of the extensive programme are well worth witnessing. The Leopold Legiere Troupe are sensational acrobats; Deora, a startling aerial gymnast; Miles. Rose and Maie play the xylophone as William in Black-Eyed Susan, and sing like angels; Mr. George Madegan's performing foxterriers are surely the limit of canine intelligence; Captain Roberts and his troupe present athletic feats, differentiated by musical displays; the clowns are up to the best circus traditions, and Mr. W. R. Albino is to the manner born as ringmaster.

On Monday evening the directors opened Derby Castle, Douglas, Isle of Man, for the first time this season with a considerable flourish of trumpets. Extensive alterations and additions have been carried out during the winter, which make for our visitors' enhanced enjoyment. The variety entertainment is distinctly good. Mr. Sam Elton is a mirth-provoking mimic; the Raglan Lady Quartette do credit to their birthplace—Mona's Isle, the home of melody; the Four Panamas are funny in their sketch The Delineator; Miss Ouida Macdermott is a popular actress-vocalist; and a special feature at Derby Castle are dancing competitions, with substantial prizes, under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. McEwen. The manager is still the popular Mr. Charles Fox.

Laddie Cliff is in London, purchasing new material for exploitation in the United States, where he is an established favourite everywhere. His stay is a short one, he having to depart again a fortnight hence.

The paragraph in the report of the L.C.C. Theatres and Music Halls Committee relating to the Sunday opening of cinematograph shows was again presented to the Council just about midnight on Tuesday. Once more it was opposed, and had to be further adjourned.

Mr. Stanley Hope, who for some years has been resident-manager for Mr. Edward Marris and Mr. Albany Ward at the Opera House, Jersey, has been appointed as manager for Mr. Oswald Stoll's new house to be opened August Bank Holiday at Croydon. Mr. H. E. Sawyer, late of the Peckham Hippodrome, has been selected as his successor.

Miss Cissie Lawson, who has acquired the Empire, Camberwell, is the only lady proprietress in England. Mr. Albert H. Adams, who has been selected by her as general-manager, has had considerable experience on the Gibbons' circuit, having been at the Camden Hippodrome, the Olympia, Shoreditch, Putney Hippodrome, and Rotherhithe Hippodrome.

Miss Nellie Donegan (Mrs. Earle Reynolds), the famous skatorial artist, has undergone a severe operation, from which she is now recovering. Miss Donegan was engaged to appear at the Palace, but the engagement has had to be postponed in consequence of her illness. We wish this most charming artist a speedy recovery.

Miss Vera Saunders, who is still in her early teens, has been much applauded during the week in her Dutch business at the Tivoli, where she has been retained. The young artist, with her charming appearance and her comedy gifts, shows considerable promise, and should not experience any great difficulty in going ahead. She will shortly produce a new song called "Billy."

It is expected that the wonderful chimpanzee, George the First, introduced by Dandy George, will give an entertainment in front of the grand stand at the Music Hall Sports. Several managers and agents have entered for the events set apart for their branches of the business, and good sport is expected.

Intending competitors for the various excellent prizes at the forthcoming Music Hall Sports at Stamford Bridge Grounds on Thursday, July 21, will please notice that the time when entries can be received is extended to the first post on Wednesday, July 13. Please hurry up and send names in, or apply for forms to Mr. Albert Le Fre, 49, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

For a really enjoyable and exhilarating farce, commend us to Sir Francis Burnand's No. 9, which Mr. Lawrence Brough, a capital comedian, and five other excellent people are presenting at the halls. When we happened on it at the London Pavilion its funny situations, in the most rollicking vein, set the whole house in a roar. It was presented with a finish worthy of the Criterion in the day of Pink Dominos.

Mr. Fred Williams, who some years since became a great music hall favourite in variety versions of popular pantomime stories, is progressing favourably after the operation he underwent last week. For some years Fred has been enjoying retirement at Clacton-on-Sea, and he, with Dan Leno, Herbert Campbell, and Harry Randall, was among the first of the artist-proprietors. Fred is the brother of Arthur Williams.

Mr. Pat Carey writes:—"I read with much pleasure the excellent report of the Terriers' Association by its good secretary, Mr. A. Were, and I note that he says it was founded on May 25, 1890, by a few music hall artists, including the late Mr. Joe Lawrence. Would it be out of place to ask you to name that few? They were Mr. Cecil Merrie, Mr. Frank Caffrey, deceased, Mr. W. F. Fletcher, and yours faithfully, Pat Carey (its first secretary)."

A most pleasing interlude took place at the Woolwich Hippodrome on Tuesday. At the Theatrical Sports at Stamford Bridge in the afternoon the Hippodrome, Woolwich, team, the holders of the tug-of-war shield, again won it for the third time in succession. Mr. Herbert H. Laidman, the genial manager, handed the gold medals (presented by The Era) to the team and trainer; also a set of silver fruit knives to Mr. Will Kendall, a stage hand, who won the first prize in the blindfold race.

During the performance of the sketch Le Gorille at the Tottenham Palace on Thursday evening by Mr. Edward Sillward and Miss Pauline Prim, the lady unfortunately broke her arm above the elbow, and had to be taken immediately in a motor to the Prince of Wales Hospital, Tottenham, where she has been retained as an in-patient. Another accident happened at the same house on Tuesday evening, when one of the Brothers Donato, the one-legged clowns, in some unaccountable way struck his temple, and fell senseless. He soon recovered, however, under the care of a medical man who happened to be in the building.

Jack Straw had to "hustle around," as they say in America, on Wednesday to leave Peterborough to attend to his Castle of Mystery at Rosherville and get back to Peterborough the same night and work two shows. He has obtained a promise of a bicycle from the well-known firm of Rudge-Whitworth, of Coventry. The following is a fresh list of victims for sports prizes:—Geo. Mozart, H. E. Pelissier, New Goswell Printing Co., Yamamoto, Dick Tubb, Water Rats, Victoria Monks, J. Lawson, Geo. Clarke, sen., Maidie Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Syd May, Jackson Pixley and company, Alexandra Dagmar, and Whit Cunliffe.

The permanent address of Bob, a bull-terrier, the property of Mr. Sam Glenroy, is The Era offices, London. Bob really is a born globe-trotter, and sometimes travels so far that he is unable to find his way home again. This peculiarity is excusable when it is known that Bob accompanies his master on tour, and perforce has to live at various addresses, thus becoming quite confused as to the exact location of his home. Through wearing on his collar a plate engraved with the words The Era Offices, London, Bob has been returned to his owner no less than six times. Last week he again disappeared, to be again restored. This time, although residing at Shepherd's Bush, Bob had trotted as far as East Ham. It is thought by Mr. Glenroy that the dog remembered a visit to Stratford, and was on his way there when he was arrested by the East Ham police for having neither home nor visible means of subsistence.

Miss Louie Tracy, "the Dapper Dandy Boy," and her husband, Mr. Sidney T. Keith, sail for South Africa on Saturday next, July 16, per R.M.S. Saxon. Miss Tracy is under contract with Messrs. Hyman for two months at the Empire, Johannesburg.

"The Battery," a new farcical sketch, by Mrs. Christie Murray, authoress of Dick's Chum and other playlets, will be produced at the Royal Standard this evening at 7.30 p.m.

A dramatic episode in one scene, by William T. Gliddon, author and composer of The Flower Girl, entitled Till Death do us Part, will be produced on Monday, and will tour the halls in the autumn.

Mr. Lionel Atwell and Miss Phyllis Relph bottom the bill next week (July 11) at the Empress, Brixton, in a revised version of the tragic little play The Fourth Kiss, by W. Douglas Newton, the well-known magazine writer.

"An Indian Romance," a story of the North American Indians, will be produced at the Queen's, Poplar, on Monday next, with Mr. Leonard Robson in the leading part. The prologue will be seen on the Bioscope, the story opening twelve years later.

Mr. Frank Harwood, the versatile performer, is making a great success with his latest number, "Early-closing day." He gets every ounce of comedy out of it. Audiences at the Camden this week appreciate the merits of his interpretation of the song by calling him three or four times.

The Tourmalines, who have just arrived in London, will appear at the Canterbury on Monday in a novel entertainment in two scenes entitled The Palace of Terpsichore, of which one of the salient features will be "the lemon coon," a very remarkable exhibition of dancing. We shall say more about this next week.

The following candidates for membership of the Terriers' Association have successfully passed the ballot:—Mr. William Leslie and Mr. Frederic Leslie (Leslie Bros.), Mr. George McNully and Mr. John McNully (the New Macs), Mr. Pete Lee, Mr. Edward Berry, Mr. Dicky Bird, and Mr. William Doust, Mr. Erne Chester, and Mr. Eric Farr, of the Tallyho Trio. Terrier Pete Noriggia was elected as W.D., and Terrier D. M. H. Hoffman as Y.B. upon Sunday last.

Photographs of the river outing party, price 2s. 6d. each, can be obtained upon application to the Secretary. A hearty welcome was extended to Terriers Harry Conlin, Charles Clark, D. M. H. Hoffman, Harry Wright, W. Wisper, and Ben Whiteley upon their reappearance in the Kennel on Sunday last.

At a meeting of a committee of the Burnley Corporation last week plans were approved for the reconstruction of the Empire Theatre, Burnley.

A number of the Oxford Music Hall waiters and assistants were able to enjoy a very pleasant Sunday at Hemel Hempstead, making the journey by road under the pilotage of Mr. F. Tomlin, who has for a very long time occupied the position of head waiter at this widely known hall. Mr. Tomlin took the chair genially at a subsequent sumptuous spread at the White Hart, a popular hostelry, the landlord being his son, Mr. C. Tomlin.

Mr. C. Bailey ably fulfilled the duties of vice-chairman. The happy company enthusiastically received the toast of "The King," the healths of Mr. C. E. Blyth-Pratt, their highly-esteemed and ever-considerate chief of staff, and of Mr. F. C. Upton, the popular assistant-manager and secretary, being also most cordially received.

In view of the repeated appearance in the public Press of paragraphs stating that certain music hall entertainments have been interrupted by the protests of Women Suffragists, it is necessary once more to give to these statements a categoric denial. The Woman Suffrage Societies are not in the least concerned with music hall politics, except that their members, in common with the general public, are amused by them. The scenes described are not made by women who are working for woman suffrage.

Bert Swan and Marie Vesta, the original Bill Smith and Liza, will produce on Monday next, at the Hippodrome, Poplar, an original coster episode, written by Bert Swan, with music and lyrics by Percy Ashdown, entitled Liza's Wedding Day, in which they will introduce Answers famous prize donkey and governess car. The special scenery will be by Chas. Sharp and company. The novel effects, including the church organ and peal of chimes, are supplied by Messrs. Hunter and Co. and Messrs. Hawkes and Co., of Piccadilly.

During the present week a novel competition is in progress at the Crystal Palace. The contest, which is open to amateur or professional, consists of what may be described as music hall "turns." About 140 competitors have entered, and these are being gradually thinned out by the tests each evening in the theatre. From the fourteen remaining in on Friday, six will be selected for the final competition to-night. Some of the competitors have shown considerable ability, and Mr. Charles Parker, of the Æolian Concert Party, the judge and director, has had some difficulty in making his selections for the final contest.

Dr. Walford Bodie broke all records last week at the Empire, Dudley, playing to packed houses nightly, and on Saturday night turning hundreds away at both houses. He was twice patronised by the Mayor and Deputy-Mayor and four times by the ex-Mayor and party, also many of the magistrates and doctors.

Mr. Charles Savage, the Corporation electrician, supplied Dr. Bodie with an electro-motor, which was connected to La Belle Electra, and the whole of the Corporation supply of electric current passed through her body, driving the motor, lighting arc lamps, &c. Dr. Bodie was also challenged by two local electricians to pass 30,000 volts through his own body. This extraordinary feat was accomplished by the Doctor at the second house last Friday in the presence of a huge audience and over two dozen of a committee including several leading electricians and well-known local gentlemen. This week he is receiving quite an ovation nightly at the Empire, Nuneaton.

Mr. Ben Woodore, Secretary of the Music Hall Home, desires to thank, on behalf of the committee, Mr. Finch Hatton (Palace, Leicester), per Ted. E. Box, for 13s. 6d.; Mrs. Harry Gait and Beresford Hope for £1 17s. 6d. (collected at the Terriers' River Outing); Empire, Camberwell, 7s. 6d.; T. H. Wells (Angel Arms, Brixton-road), 3s. 6d.; Neiman and Benn's Agency, 11s.; and Mr. Harry Bawn (Empire, Edmonton), per Fred Alexander, £2 5s. Men's cast-off clothes are urgently needed, and are always very acceptable. The address is 31, Wilson-road, Camberwell, S.E. The next committee meeting will be held on Thursday next at noon at the Three Stags, Kennington-road. Griff, President of the Terriers, has sent a donation of £2 2s. to the Home fund. Mr. Arthur Were and Mr. Berry Hope have been added to the list of the Home committee. The date of the presentation to Miss Vesta Tilley and Miss Kitty Colyer will be shortly announced.

The Palace, Greenwich, after being closed for a period of six weeks, reopened on Monday under the auspices of Mr. D. M. Kerr.

The annual meeting of the members of the Music Hall Sick Fund will be held at the Crown Hotel, Charing Cross-road, on Wednesday next, at 4 p.m. All members in town are invited to attend.

Beatie and Bass, after a seven weeks' successful run in London and provinces, returned on Monday to the Continent, and opened at the Ausstellung Variété, Munich, with the greatest success.

Mr. Len Teel, "the suffering dame," will be heard during next week at the South London, where he will be singing new numbers by Gilbert Wells and Will Godwin. For the last four years Mr. Teel has been with Mr. Robert Arthur in pantomime, but has not yet settled for next Christmas.

Among the newcomers at the Coliseum next week are Miss Dorothy Ward, the musical comedy favourite; Phil and Nellie Peters, entertainers; Wood, Wells, and Wilkins, in a singing sketch; Cornalia and Eddie, eccentric acrobatic comedians; and Black and White, two acrobatic girls. Mesdames Karsavina and Baldina and the other Russian dancers, Olga, Elgar, and Bli Hudson, Jen Latona, and Cecilia Loftus remain on the bill.

Miss Melinda May, Secretary of the Music Hall Ladies' Guild (61, New Oxford-street, W.C.), on behalf of the committee, begs most gratefully to thank the following: Mrs. Vernon Cowper (collection), 4s., contributed principally by Griff; Mrs. Crowsher (donation), 2s. 6d.; Mrs. McGovern, stage costumes and wardrobe basket; Mrs. Vernon Cowper, leather portmanteau and basket.

Will Mrs. Arthur Hallon kindly communicate at once to above? She attended a meeting on Aug. 11 last year. The handsome portière curtain is hers, her ticket being No. 50. Will anyone make an offer for the fifteen large-sized band books, given by Messrs. Dennis and Morris, per Sisters Macarte?

"Hungary," of June 15, a society journal published in Budapest, contains the following: "Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Knowles, with their kinsman Mr. Johnson, are arranging a tour in Hungary for the purpose of picking up information and taking moving pictures for their forthcoming autumn lectures in the United States. They are expected here towards the end of this month.

"On the occasion of his flying visit a couple of weeks ago Mr. Knowles met with a cordial reception at the Ministries of Commerce and Public Instruction, where every facility was promised him to attain the object of his visit, even to the placing at his disposal of a guide and interpreter to accompany him to Babolna, Mezohegyes, Kecskemet, and other places in the interior of the country." Mr. Knowles returned to this country on Monday, and the same day journeyed to Glasgow to fulfil a week's engagement. What a hustler!

The original Amasis, the Egyptian Man of Mystery, is scoring a big success at Collins's this week, presenting several new and baffling illusions. This is his second week in London after a most successful tour of nearly twelve months in the provinces, where he has made a big reputation. His original illusion, "The Evolution of the Golliwog," must be seen to be believed. His assistants disappear and appear in most bewildering fashion, and he works with a coolness and ease which evoke great applause.

On Saturday night last, July 2, Sir Thomas Lipton and suite, accompanied by Provost Miller and Councillors Fisher and Cunningham (of Rothesay), paid a visit to the Rothesay Pavilion. After witnessing the entertainment and skating, Sir Thomas Lipton and party were entertained by Mr. J. Horn (director) and Mr. Charles A. White (Manager), to whom he expressed his great delight in the building and his thorough enjoyment, and personally congratulated Mr. White and wished him every success.

At Kiralfy's Theatre, Brussels, on Saturday, a fine féerie was produced called Au Pays des Merveilles. It is in eleven tableaux, and the ballets are very big and beautiful, 300 dancers being employed. One of the hits of the evening is made by the Webb Troupe of swimmers, with their exciting and amusing entertainment, which is given in a "veritable canal" which has been made between the audience and the stage. The Brussels papers are loud in their praises of Mr. Bolossy Kiralfy and of Mr. Durell, the producer of the spectacle.

If the condition of Charles Hilbury (on whose behalf an appeal was recently made over the signature of Mr. Charles Wilmott) will permit, an effort will be attempted, possibly to-day (Saturday), to move him to Westcliff, in the hope that the change of air will benefit him, if ever so slightly. Fred Murray, who has collaborated so often and well with the stricken composer, will see to his comfort en route. The latter will be glad to hear from friends and admirers of Charles Hilbury at 48, Offley-road, Brixton, S.W.

Frederick Thomas, a lad of sixteen, was singing for chance coppers in a street off the Strand, when the quality of his voice attracted the attention of a music hall agent. The result is that Thomas is to appear on Monday at the Euston Music Hall at what must be to him the magnificent salary of £10 a week. He is possessed of a pure soprano voice of considerable power, which experts state will never break. A long tour has been arranged for him. Sometimes he will appear at two halls a week, when, of course, he will earn £20. The two songs he will start with are "Long Live the King" and "Good-bye, Noreen," both by Bowker Andrews.

A remarkable occurrence in a railway carriage was reported on Thursday from Watford, where, at the hospital, a young Glasgow man named John Burke lies in a critical condition from a wound in the throat. When between Pinner and Bushey, on Wednesday night, the 7.10 train out of Euston was pulled up by means of the communication cord, and going to a first-class carriage the guard found Burke and Miss Jessie Templeton, the well-known music hall artist. "I do not wish to travel with this gentleman any further," said Miss Templeton, and the guard thereupon induced Mr. Burke to go to another carriage. The train then restarted, but on reaching Bushey Burke was found in a collapsed state owing to a terrible wound in his throat, apparently self-inflicted.

The new "Kinemacolor" pictures to be included in the Palace Theatre programme next Monday comprise some brilliant views of an Atlantic liner under full steam—a veritable thing of life, undreamt of when Coleridge, a century before the age of cinematography in Nature's actual tints, deplored the idleness of "a painted ship upon a painted ocean." The Cedric, of the White Star Line, arrives from New York at Holyhead, her passengers disembark, and entrain by the sumptuous boat express for Euston. As a foil to all this bustle and activity, Mr. Urban will supplement the exhibition with a delightfully rural and particularly seasonable subject, illustrating the growing and gathering of Kentish strawberries at St. Mary Cray.

SONGS, WRITERS, AND SINGERS.

YOUTH must ever have its "turn" served, and also its "fling," and Messrs. Francis and Day—always mindful of the fact that the countless "votaries of Terpsichore," as Mr. Turveydrop would say, will shortly direct enquiring eyes in their direction for new dance music, although the publication of their Twenty-ninth Dance Album is staying the said dancers' appetite for a while, especially at the great palaces of Blackpool and Douglas—have just secured for publication in due course some new and original items for the youth (and beauty) of these islands to turn and evolute to in the shape of new dances and dance music which will delight and fill with amazement the most fastidious disciples of "the mazy."

AMONG the pieces that will be received with acclamation may be mentioned two that at the recent annual conference of the British Association of Teachers of Dancing were awarded first prizes. One is "La Vallière" square dance (which also received a certificate of merit), invented by G. F. Childs, P.B.A.T.D., composed by Walter Seward; the other is "The Pembroke" round dance, invented by Edward E. Mawdett, composed by Miss E. Gladys Mawdett. Another piece that will also be issued by Mr. David Day's firm is the "Aero" two-step, which was honoured with a second prize by the above-mentioned body. It is invented by R. B. Kennedy and composed by Clement Harris.

OTHER pieces of the highest merit also to be issued by Messrs. Francis and Day are the "Cleveland" gavotte, invented and composed by Arthur Morris, who gave the world of dancing the original veleta; "Mac's Own" schottische, by James Follit and Clement Harris; "Murmuring Waves," by Karl Kaps, the celebrated composer and bandmaster; "Dance Barbaric," by Cyril Dengard; and "The Bonton Parade," by T. Almond and Clement Harris.

AT the Metropolitan and also at Chelsea Miss Florrie Forde, looking radiant in a grey costume and picture hat, has during the week been proving that audiences, however lusty, cannot drown her fine voice, which they attempt to do during her rendering of the chorus of "Flanagan," the easy first among the rags of 1910. A very striking portrait of this popular artist adorns the title-page of her new song, "Has anyone found a girl?" which was issued by Messrs. Francis and Day, the publishers of "Flanagan," a day or two since.

AT the Duke of York's Theatre, where The Dawn of a To-morrow is the premier attraction, that other great attraction, Mr. John Crook's orchestra, has been adding to its admirers by musicianly renderings of Herbert E. Haines's dance "Coquette" and Archibald Joyce's "Songe d'Automne" waltz. Many applications for these pieces continue to arrive at Messrs. Francis and Day's, the publishers of both.

A PRETTY song from the pen of Leonard Cooke, with music by H. E. Pether, has been secured by Messrs. Francis and Day. It is entitled "May I ask you what your name is?" The same house are issuing a number with the quaint title of "Down goes the brick wall!" The names of R. P. Weston and Hermann E. Darewski on its frontispiece are good and sufficient reasons for its inclusion in any firm's catalogue.

THE irrepressible Tom W. Connor (the number of whose songs for stars has been literally legion) has published with Messrs. Francis and Day an up-to-date comic song, entitled "Only think of it! (Half-a-dollar divorce)." Mr. Fred Earle has secured the singing rights.

THAT favourite vocalist, Mr. Frank Harwood, has in his newest song one that will be of great value to him judging by the manner in which it has been received by audiences in the Metropolis. By Paul Pelham and J. P. Long, and entitled "Early-closing day," it will be shortly issued in sheet music form by Messrs. Francis and Day.

AT the London Coliseum Mr. Jack Pleasants, specially billed as the "Shy Comedian," has been winning his usual meed of applause with the song published by Messrs. Francis and Day entitled "I'm shy, Mary Ellen, I'm shy!" He has published this week with the same house songs entitled "Said I—Said she" and "Ma! ma!" both by Charles Ridgwell and G. A. Stevens.

MR. CHARLES R. WHITTLE, whose song, "He's a naughty, naughty boy!" is a great favourite with the masses, has acquired a new number which will also be published by Messrs. Francis and Day. Its title is "I've said good-bye to the dear old Strand," and it is written and composed by F. W. Carter and J. A. Glover-Kind.

A SONG, the melody of which is by C. W. Murphy and the words by George Arthurs, is bound to command attention, and such a one is their "Don't do anything until you hear from me," which has just been purchased by Messrs. Francis and Day.

AMONG other songs about to be produced by Messrs. Francis and Day may be mentioned "The simple little girl from town," by E. W. Rogers and John Neat; "I don't want to go to bed," by G. A. Stevens; "My Pearl of Putney," by Ralph Nairn and Bertrand Davis; "In your gown of grenadine," by Fred Murray; "You can't beat London for the girls!" (sung by Mr. Arthur Woodville), by H. Staunton, W. E. Haines, and D. Meher; and "In the evening when I leave you, Eva dear," by Charles Collins.

MISS MARIE BLYTHE seems to have the knack of divining the popular ballads each year, and her intuition is seldom at fault. She is this week appearing at the Metropolitan, where she is making a great impression with A. J. Mills and Bennett Scott's great chorus ballad, "I wonder if you care." The Star Music Co. are to be congratulated on this winner.

WHIT CUNLIFFE has secured from A. J. Mills and Bennett Scott another fine chorus number in "Up she goes." This song gives the favourite light comedian many opportunities for showing himself in humorous vein, besides having a chorus which looks like equalling the same composer's "Hello! it's a different girl again." The Star Music Co. publish "Up she goes," and have in hand another Whit Cunliffe number, of which more anon.

MISS ROSIE LLOYD has in study a novelty by A. J. Mills and Bennett Scott entitled "When I take my morning promenade." The costume which the charming little lady is having prepared for this number is a Parisienne creation of artistic elegance. At the Tivoli Miss Lloyd is meeting with great success with Aylmer Lee and Maurice Scott's fine chorus song, "Love is like a balloon." This looks like rivalling the same composer's "Swing me higher, Obadiah," and is published by the Star Music Publishing Co.

A COMPANY has been formed to erect an up-to-date palace of varieties in Doncaster. A prominent site has been secured in the heart of the town, and building is to commence forthwith. The holding capacity will be about 2,500. It is proposed to open it in March next. There is an influential board of directors, with Signor Pepi as managing-director. The architects are Messrs. Ward and Ball, of Birmingham.

LONDON VARIETY THEATRES.

THE COLISEUM.

Mr. Oswald Stoll's forward policy here is being generously supported, and the excursus of the famous house into the realms of ballet is receiving justification daily and nightly in the applause of delighted lovers of true classical dancing. The return of such a gifted prima donna as Mlle. Tamara Karsavina, after a highly successful engagement in Paris, seemed to be extremely welcome to her admirers on Monday, especially as she was seen in a poetic dancing fantasy new to this country, entitled L'Oiseau de Feu. The storyette is charged with the temporary despair of a lover, whose twin soul becomes a bird. Sorrow endures only for a short time, for joy floods the heart of the lover when the star of his existence changes back into the creature with fairy footsteps who has been the idol of his dreams. Mlle. Karsavina fascinates us all the time in this pretty production, and she has a most agile partner in M. Theodore Kousloff, whose steps are light and gestures significant.

Miss Jen Latona is no stranger to the Stoll houses in London, having appeared both in the West End and suburbs with her husband Mr. Frank Latona; but on Monday she entertained the audience solus. So great was her opening success that she is not likely to work in double harness again—at any rate, not for some time. She opened at the piano, playing her own accompaniment to the well-known "Flower song" sung by Siebel in Faust. Then taking up the concertina, she showed her musical versatility in the blithe Scotch song, "The Thistle." "I've got rings on my fingers and bells on my toes," which is said to be the rage of England and America, gave opportunity to the singer to emphasise the lighter vein, but her greatest triumph came when she sang the quaint song, "Because I'm married now." The audience called her again and again, and would not be denied the encore. As Miss Latona—who, by the way, looks a particularly dainty housemaid in cap and apron—is equal to giving parodies of Tetrazzini and Harry Lauder, she may be said to be particularly well endowed as an entertainer, and should go far.

A musical turn far above the average is presented by Eli Hudson, the well-known flute and piccolo virtuoso, Olga, a charming singer, and Elgar, a young lady flautist, closely related to Mr. Hudson. Grieg and Gounod are drawn upon in the selections of the trio, the rendering of the famous "Berceuse" of the latter composer being most artistic. Miss Cecilia Loftus astonishes one by the range of her impersonations. To go from George Formby to Yvette Guilbert is a tour de force in the realms of artistic impersonations, but quite as great a contrast is furnished by Mr. Alfred Lester and Miss Margaret Cooper, or Miss Clarice Vance and Miss Ethel Irving. The great success of this gifted artist continues, and she might very well occupy the stage for an hour. Alice Raymond scores in A Night in Egypt, her fine playing evoking loud applause. The Kratons are particularly clever hoop rollers; Bert Williams wins favour as a ventriloquist; and it is a long time since we saw anything so genuinely droll as the turn of Leslie Brothers, comedians and instrumentalists. Their business is a screamer from start to finish. Mr. Jack Pleasants has a capital song in "I'm shy, Mary Ellen, I'm shy," to which he does complete justice; and the Marsumas are clever bicyclists, whose smartness and fun are never in doubt.

THE HOLBORN EMPIRE.

The Lady Bandits have levied a heavy toll upon the Holborn Empire this week, and extorted from a willing public rich spoils in the way of mirth. The realisation of a golf course in the Surrey hills has brought forth unstinted admiration, and the brightness and sparkle of the production has made its success inevitable. Mr. Edward Lauri exerts his talents as a comedian to the utmost purpose in the part of the genial M.P., who is taken prisoner on his own golf-course by a party of ladies posing as banditti, and made to undergo various exciting incidents. Mr. Lauri turns everything to comic account, and every droll delivery gains a laugh. His song of "The seaside girl" is greatly effective. Miss May Beatty makes of Lady Diana a handsome and debonair brigand chief, and sings tunefully, her voice asserting itself melodiously, even amid the uproarious laughter aroused in the comedy scenes. Miss Cicely Lowe as Lady Daisy and the rest of the comely crowd make up a pretty picture, and the choruses are nicely sung.

An elaborate item of the bill is also the sketch Perkins, M.P., in which Mr. Albert Bruno portrays the redoubtable Perkins, and by his eccentricities in the House of Commons puts the house in front into uncontrollable mirth. A novel act, in which grand pianos figure, is that of Carlisle and Wellmon, who play duets on those instruments with remarkable facility. Their entertainment is varied by song and dance and by conversational interludes that prove amusing. Mr. Ed. E. Ford is rightly described as the "President of the Face Trust," and with his marvellous manipulation of his features diverts and astonishes the audience. His reproduction of a man going through the various phases of an interview with his dentist proves as excruciatingly funny as ever, and a billiard player handling the rest is equally grotesque.

The comedy powers of Ray and Calden are exercised with the customary effect, and bursts of laughter greet the ever-varying antics of the comedian. The expertness and grace of the lady's dancing is also recognised. Miss Ethel Loftus sings with extraordinary effect a song about "Father"; dainty Venie Clements as Marie Louise makes a bewitching blancheuse of Paris; the Yankee Doodle Girls move in terpsichorean revels with rhythmic grace; and the liberal programme also includes Mimi Thornton, speciality dancer; Gwladys Soman, descriptive vocalist; the Prince Milner Trio; Gene Morelle, "ragged virtuoso"; and Wilson Hallett, in his children impersonations. The duties of manager are ably discharged by Mr. E. Leslie Conroy, and Mr. James Sale, at the head of the orchestra, secures the happiest results.

CAMBERWELL PALACE.

This week the programme here—a particularly lengthy one—contains many sparkling items providing an entertainment of great attractiveness. The Kennedy Girls are an exceedingly smart troupe of singers and dancers. A special feature of their performance is the jiu-jitsu dance, which appears to be an interesting mixture of this famous style of wrestling and a dance of an athletic and artistic nature. Their turn is much appreciated. Sid Bandon sings "I met her on Yarmouth sands"; and Miss Lillian French, a popular vocalist and mimic, scores with her impersonations of Vesta Tilley and Gertie Gitana.

Mr. Edward Lauri, Miss May Beatty, and company have secured a successful one-act musical-comedy play in The Lady Bandits. This society seems to be composed of women who have determined to cast aside the skirt and to strike out boldly for their rights. Much to his discomfiture, the gentleman golfer captured by them is told that he must also cast aside his trousers and become a member of the band. Miss May Beatty is a capital Lady Diana, the head of the bandits; Miss Cicely Lowe capably supports the rôle of Lady Daisy; and Mr. Edward Lauri creates roars of laughter in the character of Josephus A. Muddifat. Some pretty music is introduced into the piece.

The Dick and Dorothy Trio, in harmony, music, and dance, show much ability in each of their specialities. Their steps are executed with remarkable precision, and their performance is worthy of special comment. Joe Hayman, the Hebrew jester, makes a speech of a particularly droll description, and afterwards sings a song, the words of which contain much truth. The Keeley Bros. supply a ball-punching display of a distinctly novel character; Miss Ivey Aberdare does well in song and dance; and Mr. Jack Lane, the Yorkshire rustic, brings down the house with his clever impersonations at the piano, where he shows how various people would sing "Has anybody here seen Kelly?" His efforts to amuse are much appreciated. Jack and Evelyn appear with conspicuous success in their latest concoction, "Introductions"—without a doubt one of their best and funniest.

Mr. Walter Bird's company produce a screaming comedy sketch entitled Her Husband. Henry Moore, a doctor, is called away from home, and during his absence his house is entered by burglars, one of them being a particularly noisy one who creates roars of laughter at the expense of his companion. It is afterwards discovered that the most respectable of the housebreakers is an escaped lunatic and the first husband of Mrs Moore. He is shot by his confederate, who thus releases the lady from a most unwelcome bond. The part of Harry Moore, the doctor, is well played by Mr. L. Grove; and Miss R. Heath is a satisfactory Jessy Moore. The maid Babette is charmingly portrayed by Miss H. Costa; William Huntley, the escaped lunatic, is effectively pictured by Mr. A. Dane; and Mr. Ernie Lotingam evokes considerable merriment by his droll impersonation of Jemmy Josser. The sketch is received with roars of laughter. Some new pictures on the Bioscope conclude this excellent entertainment. Mr. A. W. Deer, the energetic and courteous manager here, discharges his duties with marked ability and tact.

BALHAM HIPPODROME.

After a week of theatricals, during which The Bad Girl of the Family officiated at the Hippodrome, that popular hall has returned to varieties, but has kept the dramatic fire burning with a new sketch of tragic import. It is a Russian episode by Sidney Blow and George Bellamy entitled

"FOR THE CAUSE."

Rudolph Rudinoff ..... MR. CHAS. VANE
Prince Kubemoff ..... MR. RICHARD LANE
Count Murovotkin ..... MR. CECIL ELGAR
Petroff ..... MR. W. D. FAZAN
Karabol ..... MR. MURRAY YORKE
Olga ..... MISS JULIE KENNARD

Thrilling situations are provided in the sketch, which introduces a number of Russian exiles, who meet in Rudolph Rudinoff's apartments in Paris. Great uneasiness has been caused among the comrades by the fact that several of their number who have secured pardons have been arrested on arrival in Russia and sent to Siberia. The cause of the trouble is Rudinoff himself, who is in the pay of the Russian Government, and his latest victim is the young Prince Kubemoff, for whom he obtains a pardon and passport, with the intention of having him seized on his arrival at Warsaw. The Prince, however, has conceived a love for Rudinoff's wife, which he allows to override his enthusiasm for the cause, and refuses to leave Paris. At the meeting of the conspirators the Prince is accused by one of their number of being the traitor, a Government envelope with the latter part of his name still decipherable being produced in evidence. He is condemned to death, and on lots being drawn the task of shooting him falls to Mme. Rudinoff. A pistol is forced into her hand, but ere she is able to draw the trigger one of the refugees, who has escaped from Siberia, breaks in and denounces Rudinoff as the betrayer. It thus becomes the task of Mme. Rudinoff to shoot her own husband, but before she can bring herself to consummate the tragedy a shot from the escaped prisoner lays the traitor low.

The arduous rôle of the lady revolutionary was acted by Miss Julie Kennard with vehemence and much emotional power. Mr. Chas. Vane made Rudinoff duly sardonic and despicable, and Mr. Richard Lane was a refined exponent of the Prince. The president of the assembly was portrayed effectively by Mr. Cecil Elgar, and a realistic appearance was made by Mr. Murray Yorke, who spoke his lines with intensity as the fugitive Karabol. The orders and decorations of the various characters denoted their rank, and the picture of a group of revolutionaries was complete. The principals were warmly recalled at the close.

The programme which the able manager, Mr. E. W. Hancorne James, has to present is judiciously varied. Mr. Whit Cunliffe supplies the headline, and renders three songs with his customary vivacity and sparkle. Mr. George Prince styles himself the "crazy comedian," and by his antics causes general laughter. The character creations of Mr. Alix Lukos are neat snapshots of distinguished persons; Rose Cambrey is a comely comedienne from Australia; and the Great Bertisch accomplishes marvellous weight-lifting feats, in which strength and skill are combined. Others in the programme are Miss Nora Stockelle, the Sisters Draycott, and Tiny and Mite, juvenile artists, together with the Bioscope.

NEW CROSS EMPIRE.

Large audiences assemble at every performance and enjoy to the full the liberal fare provided by the management of this popular hall, so ably managed for the proprietors by Mr. Fred Epitaux, assisted by Mr. Will Horsfield, the stage being under the capable direction of Mr. Walter Smith. A great favourite of the current bill is the evergreen Chirgwin, whose personality is so well known, and whose popularity never wanes. He was very warmly greeted on the night of our visit, and his clever contributions received their due meed of applause. Miss Alice Kingsley delighted all hearers, her fine contralto voice being heard to great advantage in her numbers; Will Johnson was received with continuous merriment, and fully deserves the title of "the lively popular comedian"; Tom Stuart is excellent in his impersonations, both dramatic and burlesque—in fact, it would be difficult to conceive any improvement. Miss Carrie Laurie's Kindergarten is an excellent entertainment. The clever little people are admirably trained, and all act, sing, and dance with evident ease and enjoyment, and make the Model School an acceptable item on any programme. Each and all were rewarded with prolonged applause.

The Hardini Trio, in a Continental musical act, pleased all by their clever manipulation of their various instruments. Miss Daisy Martell contributed a highly-appreciated and attractive turn, which received its due meed of applause. Messrs. Campbell and Barber, the well-known cyclists, give an exhibition of wonderful skill in comedy and acrobatic cycling, all their tricks being worked with smartness and precision. They were warmly applauded by the audience.

Dan Lipton's company in Songland made a great hit. There are three scenes—The Runaway Marriage, Trafalgar-square, and A Floral Bower—all exceedingly well made and arranged. Miss Eva Kelland as the Italian girl has some very pretty numbers, to which her beautiful voice and artistic method do ample justice. She is assisted by a quartette of pretty girls, each representing a floral bouquet. The clever vocal chef d'orchestre is Mr. Forshaw Kershaw; and the business arrangements are in the capable hands of Mr. Arthur Tate. The entire production was a decided success. Up-to-date pictures on the American Bioscope brought an excellent bill to a satisfactory finish.

HACKNEY EMPIRE.

The management here, by means of very engaging programmes, are not finding it difficult to successfully combat the attractions that the summer months provide, audiences ruling very large. The bill for the current week is capitally varied, and designed to cater for the most exacting requirements. The Sisters St. Julian, who open the proceedings, sing a couple of good songs, and conclude with an attractive dance. They are well received. Siems, the Danish card and coin manipulator, submits a clever act. The artist does some wonderful feats, everything he presents being performed with great dexterity and finish, and he deservedly gained a most hearty reception.

Barrett and Knowles, in a cross-talk act are most amusing. Their burlesque ballad business is very humorous, and their concluding number is very quaint. They secured one of the receptions of the evening, and took a great number of "curtains." Mr. Edward Davies, the well-known operatic tenor, is an artistic feature of the evening. He rendered Tosti's "Good-bye" and "Mary of Argyle" in faultless style, gaining much applause. Jock Mills, Scotch comedian, sings a couple of songs, the second being the better of the two, and gives an original dance, his performances meeting with approbation.

Miss Daisy Irvine and company appear in a dramatic episode entitled A Sister's Love, by Percy Fullerton and Mrs. Russell. The plot appears to us to be deficient in probability and weak in its climax. Electrical inventors are not as a rule so careless with plans or so communicative in conversation. Miss Daisy Irvine herself was satisfactory as Sarah; Mr. Chas. Felton gave a capital study of the German, Von Helm; and Mr. Austin Mortimer as Richards filled in the picture. The playlet was received with great favour, Miss Irvine and Mr. Felton sharing the honours of a call.

Chris Richards, who is bracketed at the bottom of the bill, is making himself a great favourite. Irresponsibility is the characteristic of his show, and he contrives to keep the audience thoroughly amused the whole time he is on the stage. He is, in addition, a wonderfully clever dancer, and the house was obviously sorry to part company with him.

Tom Edwards, the ventriloquist, with "Curly," who is also at the bottom, is renewing previous successes. His business with the newspaper boy is as entertaining as ever, and in addition he provides a new item in the shape of a newly-born infant. In the course of this the artist carries on conversations with the nurse and other members of his family who are "off." The whole thing is very cleverly done, the imitation of the child being wonderfully realistic, and quite accounting for his recent most disconcerting experience in the States. It also served to display Mr. Edwards's gifts in comedy, and the audience thoroughly appreciated it and accorded him a great reception.

At the top of the bill Miss Victoria Monks is the attraction. The Bioscope is, as ever, entertaining; and Mr. Greco's fine orchestra give a capital performance of National American Airs. Mr. Charles

THE FORESTERS.

An excellent programme is submitted to the patrons of this cosy and well-conducted establishment in the East End of London, the many recent improvements in the seating and decorating making it one of the most comfortable in the district. The top item for this week is Harry Roxbury's company, headed by Mr. Tubby Edlin, in The Cowboy Millionaire, written and produced by Mr. Roxbury, with music by Dudley Powell and Tubby Edlin. The trifle throughout is quite good, the music being bright and the humorous portion is well cared for by Mr. Edlin as William Wiggs, a funny ex-convict, who, in the disguise of a postman, calls at the house of Major Titus Blazes and is mistaken for a certain millionaire who is expected to arrive, dressed in some curious get-up. The Major's object is to marry his daughter to the rich visitor, and much good fun is witnessed in the little love scenes of the pair. The character of the daughter, Fay Blazes, is charmingly played by Miss Clara Moore, who renders great assistance to Mr. Edlin in the laughable portion of the skit. Mr. Herbert Wellesley is good as the Major, and Mr. Fred Guinness does well as Phipps, the page, the minor characters being well enacted by Mr. Henri Dore as Columbas K. Collacash and Mr. Fred Devenport as Tom Westover.

A clever item is given by Horace and Olga's table troupe of dogs and cats, the animals performing their amusing feats with great rapidity, for immediately one is finished another dashes forward to do his trifle, the whole being smartly accomplished throughout. Miss Gladys Hooley in a delightful little scena, My Fiddle and I, displays her wonderful powers on that instrument, her many selections being well received, and at the finale the lady is deservedly encored. Mr. Tod Lowen, comedian, in old melodies with new words, possesses good numbers in "Hilarity" and "Getting old and silly," the latter well suiting the artist's particular style. Miss Josephine Crook has a powerful soprano voice, and with the assistance of pictures illustrated on the Bioscope renders two tuneful songs in "Where are the scenes of yesterday" and "Ship, ahoy!" the chorus of the latter being well taken up by the audience.

Norman G. Acton, Arthur O'Keene, and Miss Gertrude Churchill are playing their dramatic episode, A Sister's Honour. The story is full of thrilling events, and every opportunity is taken by those concerned to get the utmost possible out of the characters. The hearty reception accorded them is fully justified.

The Seven National Girls, in costumes representing the British nations, prove themselves all capable artists, for much good dancing and singing is indulged in, particularly good items being "An English girl" and a Scotch song. Mr. Johnny Hurley, a bright little coster comedian, has a tuneful song, "I don't want," the music of which is decidedly catchy; and Mr. Tom Groves sings "Let it go," which refers mostly to spending money in helping those in need. The Dancing Paceys give a smart dancing act, and many good films are displayed on the Bioscope. Mr. Pete Murray has been installed here as resident-manager, and the genial young Charles Hale as his assistant.

ILFORD HIPPODROME.

A very noticeable and gratifying feature of this outer metropolitan hall has been the marked increase in the attendances at both houses during the past few weeks, and each succeeding week produces better records than the previous one. The reason for this is twofold. First, the closing of the Paragon as a music hall has been the means of many music hall lovers having to find a new house of entertainment, and a goodly number of East Enders take the opportunity of running over to Ilford, a journey which only occupies a comparatively small amount of time, thanks to the accelerated tramway service since the L.C.C. cars have inaugurated the through system from Aldgate to Ilford. Secondly, the management of the Hippodrome have continued to engage the premier talent available, and given special attention to the proper blending of variety in the programme. These two features have undoubtedly brought the Hippodrome into the front rank of East End halls, and there is every reason to believe that the position will not only be maintained but improved.

The programme this week is full of entertaining items, and a popular favourite is seen in Harry Randall, whose topical ditties and amusing patter bring forth much mirth. His two songs, "The Servant" and "Harry, the handy man," are rendered in his own inimitable style. An excellent performance is given by The Katos, with their automatic theatre. The imitation orchestra and audience in private boxes is very cleverly manipulated, and on the miniature stage mannikin representations of Miss Vesta Victoria and other well-known stars elicit the heartiest applause.

Mr. Jan Rudenyi and company present a good sketch, entitled The Power of Music, in which all the artists excel. Mr. Jan Rudenyi demonstrates his wonderful abilities as a violinist, and his beautiful rendering of "The Cradle Song" is vociferously encored by the audience. Mr. Fred Maxwell, assisted by a powerful company, also comes in for a hearty reception in his presentation of the sensational romantic episode The Girl I Love. The special scenery and effects are on a very elaborate scale. Speedwell, the wizard painter, gives a unique exhibition of lightning drawing and painting, and his sketches of the King and Mr. Joseph Chamberlain are wonderfully lifelike considering the speed at which they are drawn.

Miss Louie Tracy, the dapper dandy boy, scores heavily with her song, "Where's the girl who doesn't love a soldier?" and Miss Ve-Ve Wootton is very fascinating with her dainty singing and dancing. Frank Frayne, comedian, and Miss Mabel Thorne both contribute excellent items, and Miss Anna Gold presents a clever singing and dancing scena, assisted by her two dancing boys. Her singing of "The Soldiers' Chorus" (Faust) receives very warm applause. Some interesting films are exhibited on Ruffell's bioscope.

ROTHERHITHE HIPPODROME.

On the evening of our visit to this spacious and popular house of varieties we found a crowded house, a state of things without doubt due to the general excellence of the programme submitted by the genial managers.

Miss Maud Hildyard and company are topping the bill in a weird, enthralling episode, entitled The Price of a Soul. The scene, which is of a startling and novel effect, is set in the chambers of a rising surgeon in London, who has for a period of years forsaken practitionary work and devoted himself to a scientific study and research of the Egyptian art of embalming. During his itinerary he discovers a well-preserved mummy, which appears to bear out his theory, and for experimental purposes he brings this specimen back to London. Mr. Russell Vaun as the scientist, who has chosen absinthe for a counteractive force, puts excellent dramatic fervour into his part, as does also Miss Maud Hildyard in the portraiture of "The Mummy." The setting is unique, and it is safe to say that whenever and wherever this powerful episode is produced it is bound to have a warm reception.

Lindsay and Harte, the Scotian couple, have a good turn—"all Scotch." The humour is pawky. The lady rendered in grand style (as a baritone) "Asleep in the deep." At the close of their number the audience clamoured for more. Miss Maggie Carr, to the accompaniment of her banjo, gives a good exhibition of the light fantastic, which was appreciated. She has a good song in "Georgia," the swinging chorus of which was taken up by "the gods." Mr. Ambrose Thorne proves himself a favourite with his songs, "Hope they won't put a tax on girls" and "If I was a Member of Parliament." The Michel Brothers give an excellent gymnastic display. Their hand-balancing tricks are clean and smartly done, and their head-to-head work is loudly applauded. Barnard's mannikins in The Coons' Revelry is an exceptionally smart and humorous sketch, and draws from the house loud and well-merited approbation. The several characters are deftly manipulated. The introduction of the comedy rooster "Chantecler" is greatly appreciated.

The Bon Dramatique Trio presented a thrilling episode in three scenes, entitled Saved by Repentance, the several parts in which were portrayed by artists whose names do not appear on the programme. Miss Peggy Monks received a good reception with her song, "Call round any old time," and got heartily encored.

The Bioscopic pictures depicting a Seaside Flirtation and Putting Back the Hands of Time are clear and well reproduced. The excellent orchestra is under the capable direction of Mr. Martin.

WOOLWICH HIPPODROME.

The fare provided this week at this popular hall would satisfy the most fastidious frequenter of music halls. It also comes as an additional "soother" after the disappointment of last week, when Marie Lloyd was to have appeared. In Richard Walley we have a juggler who is fast becoming a second Cinquevalli, his manipulation of billiard balls, cues, chalks, hats, chairs, tables, sticks, flowers, and, finally, blazing torches, being quite bewildering. Those popular comedy artists, The Maples, bring their screaming skit, How to Treat a Burglar, which is too funny for words. Bonnie Goodwin's Apollo Picaninnies add to their laurels here, a storm of applause greeting them on their appearance. Their buck dancing speciality is preceded by a coon song and dance by their instructress Miss Lily Vine. The final dance round and cake-walk, in which the little coloured lady is bending almost double, is really a most clever performance.

Borrett and Walden (ladies) present an original pantomimic episode, A Dutch Romance. The scene is laid in the courtyard of a Dutch laundry, and whilst Gretchen is busily engaged at her tub, Hans enters and pays to her his addresses, of which she does not approve. After snubbing him she turns her back, kicks off her sabots, and prepares to knit, when Hans snaps them up and deposits them in the soapsuds, to the dismay of Gretchen. Hans looks over the wall, and then climbs over with a dainty pair of shoes and a bouquet. After a little coquetry she accepts both, and a graceful dance finishes a pretty little scena.

Walter Barrett, the renowned Lancashire baritone, sings his latest success, "Long live the King," the refrain of which is thrown on the sheet and taken up by the audience with great gusto. He also sings "Thora" with great feeling and power. Addie Lennard, the well-known comedienne, brings a couple of new songs, her first, "National lovers," being rendered in her own inimitable style. Her second, "The Circus Clown," is extremely clever, as is also her eccentric dance which follows. The Sisters Condor are well received in their musical sketch, their singing, acting, and playing reaching an unusually high standard. Dusty Rhodes, popular as ever, convulses his audience, first with his parody on "Somewhere" in clerical garb, and later as a footballer in "Pictures I saw in a candle flame." The Bioscope displays some fine films, notably A Friend in Need, which illustrates the truth of the old maxim. Cecil Gray brings a company, including Miss Dora Eastlake, in a new and original one-act dramatic play entitled To-morrow's Dawn, by the Rev. S. S. Edwards, author of The Last Straw. Mr. Jno. Manners is very clever as Captain Jack Granby; Mr. Frank Dale is well placed as the miserable sneak, Captain F. Vivian; Mr. Eric Norman is a dapper Tony Fowler; Miss Dora Eastlake as Natalie leaves nothing to be desired; and the Dorian of Mr. Cecil Gray is powerful.

SHOREDITCH EMPIRE.

There is great satisfaction when visiting a variety house at seeing a grand array of talent, and East-Enders have every confidence in the enterprising policy of Mr. Manager Monroe. The provision of a programme of great length and excellence has resulted in packed houses during the week. When Mr. Herbert Shelley, the celebrated actor-author, first produced his protean play Dan the Outlaw, we predicted that it would have a record run, and after four years of great success with it he has been fortunate enough to surpass himself in a new farcical piece from his own pen—a farcical comedy playlet—entitled Patsy's Courtship. The scene of this is laid in Phœnix Park, Dublin, 1800. This act is the crowning effort of Mr. Shelley, as it embodies a range of character from the variety farceur to the legitimate comedian. Then there are two specially good songs introduced, and there is no need to say that they are rendered by the protagonist of the play in a way that he has made entirely his own. They bear the titles of "Nail the horseshoe on the door" and "Patsy Riley," and bring forth round after round of applause. West-End audiences will have the opportunity of seeing this novel new act three weeks hence at the Oxford, but meanwhile we may heartily congratulate Mr. Shelley on the instantaneous success of his great new production, for which we anticipate a long run.

Among other attractions in the capital entertainment are Ingram and Irving, in a screaming absurdity, The New Office Boy. This happily associated duo are responsible for a good deal of amusement, and go well. Little Ganty as the captain of the Boys' Brigade cut some remarkable capers; the Keebles, duettists and dancers, are seen and heard at their very best in a couple of numbers "Bathing" and "Sunbird"; the latter number goes extremely well, and the music of a finely-executed dance is very tuneful. Tom Moore, a comedian with a fine voice, causes much laughter in a ditty in which he describes his first and last cigar. He is recalled over and over again. The Three Orleans, who should not be missed, sing very nicely, and their rich harmony arouses the house to a great pitch of enthusiasm; the Hulls, in a comedy musical act, prove themselves to be a couple of smart entertainers.

Mr. Henry Bedford and company, in The Bottom Dog, is very warmly welcomed. The story of the play is very interesting and it is brightly written. Mr. Bedford as Bill Baxter is decidedly powerful, and deserves all the applause he receives. Mr. Fred Hasker as the Clergyman (Sky-Pilot) is exceedingly good, and aids the success. Very interesting pictures here on the Bioscope are always appreciated. The orchestra is under the direction of Mr. W. McDonald, and the selection and accompaniments are well played.

THE EMPRESS ANNIVERSARY.

The eleventh anniversary of this popular hall was celebrated on Thursday, the 30th ult., when the management put on a programme which was in every way worthy of the occasion. In addition to the usual turns, many of our leading artists had, if their other engagements permitted, promised to assist, and it seemed a pity that the extreme length of the bill did not permit them all to appear. Needless to say, the holding capacity of the house was taxed to its utmost. An early start was made with a well-rendered overture by the orchestra, and from thence onward turn followed turn with great rapidity. A very popular number was that of Sid May, who gave some exceedingly clever imitations of leading variety comedians, among them being George Robey, Mark Sheridan, and G. H. Chirgwin. Ferguson and Mac made a decided hit, their efforts causing roars of laughter. Maidie Scott gave her old favourite, "Everybody works but father," and its sequel, to the satisfaction of all present; and Miss Lottie Lennox gave a well-rendered number which earned her deafening applause.

Miss Alexandra Dagmar, as usual, was a host in herself, and showed that her hold on the public is as great as ever; and Herbert Clifton repeated former successes. The singing of the Royal Italian Trio was one of the treats of the evening, their voices blending most admirably. Some exceedingly clever juggling was shown by Gicardo, who performed tricks with an ease that made them appear facile in the extreme. A very amusing sketch, entitled Half a Dollar, was presented by Haines and Borthwick. This has been recently considerably improved, and was a veritable scream from start to finish. Miss Daisy Dormer, as usual, rendered a good account of herself in one of her popular chorus numbers, and it was a pity that the length of the programme did not allow her to give some of her inimitable dancing.

Miss Gladys Nelson, one of the daughters of the popular manager here, had a most enthusiastic reception, and proved herself to be in excellent fettle. For one so young her impersonations of some of our leading comediennes were wonderful, and on concluding she had many times to bow her acknowledgments. The dancing of Master Doonan earned him plenty of applause, and Gordon is to be complimented upon being the lucky possessor of a fine voice. Amongst others who contributed mention may be made of Kate Gourlay, The Maples, Bella Belmont, The Curtis Trio, The Glenvilles, Allen and Austen, Edwards and Espinosa, Hayman and Harvey, Margaret Ismay, Daisy Silcott, George Prince, and Billy Farrell.

Dashing Miss Ella Shields will next week produce at the Oxford and her other turns Messrs. John P. Harrington and William Hargreaves' new chorus number, "Remember me to the boys you see," which good judges confidently anticipate will be one of the biggest successes sung by this accomplished artist. Messrs. B. Feldman and Co. are the publishers.

Messrs. Feldman and Co. wish it to be distinctly understood that Miss Venie Clements, the original singer of "Marie Louise," Mellor, Lawrance and Gifford's great song, has prior singing rights everywhere, and no other artist is empowered to sing it unless she has written permission from the Arthur-street firm to do so.

Miss Dorothy Ward, at Glasgow, made a great success with Chas. K. Harris's latest big ballad, "Yesterday," published by Feldman and Co. She has also been eminently successful with other songs published by the same firm.

Miss Clara Beck, who has just returned to England after her successful pantomime engagement in South Africa, will shortly open at the principal London halls in a répertoire of new songs specially supplied by Messrs. Feldman and Co.

Miss Ethel Beech, at the Empire, Shepherd's Bush, is this week achieving success with Messrs. Harrington, Neat, and Rogers' rustic romance, "My sweet garden queen." This song is published by Feldman and Co.

Miss Alice Tremayne and Harry Claff are winning golden opinions at the Hippodrome, Rochdale, this week, with Feldman and Co.'s dainty number, "I wonder if it's true?" by Clare Kummer. They will sing the same song in their refined sketch, The Demon and the Fairy, next week at the East Ham Palace.

Two important interpolated numbers in the Empire, Leicester-square, revue are Mark Sheridan's "record winner," "I do like to be beside the seaside," and Mr. Fred Barnes's equally great success, "I'd rather be by the fireside," both of which are going with a bang in Mr. George Grossmith, jun.'s up-to-date comedy concoction. These two songs are published by B. Feldman and Co.

Messrs. John P. Harrington and Orlando Powell, who have been responsible for so many of Miss Millie Hylton's past successes, have just fitted that clever lady with a new comedy character number, for special exploitation at the Coliseum and other important Stoll houses shortly, entitled, "I couldn't help being a lady," and are now busily engaged on other commissions for the same artist. Messrs. Harrington and Powell have also just fitted Miss Marie Lloyd with a very clever "song with interruptions," which she will produce in town early in August.

"HULLO, PEOPLE!"

The chief feature of a revue is its constancy to change; and even the name of Hullo, London! at the Empire has been altered, with the production of a revised version on Monday evening, to the title quoted above. The return, too, of Miss Valli Valli from America has enabled the management to secure the services of that eminent favourite of Empire patrons as the new commère. Early in the progress of Mr. George Grossmith, jun.'s, scheme of fun she appears as the Balkan Princess, with a number of suitors of various degrees of ugliness; but in this skit there is not much possibility of amusing travesty. Greater opportunity is found by Mr. J. F. McArdle in his broad, good-natured skit on "Teddy" Roosevelt, who sings a capital topical song on the way that the ex-President would run the British Empire, with a verse of special significance on Egypt. The distinguished Yank's passion for speaking is satirised. To the question, "Have you been to the city?" he replies, "Oh, yes; they gave me the Freedom in a casket." "I thought you took it—in your speech," is the witty rejoinder. Teddy also has an unhappy knack of shooting big game on sight, and is with difficulty prevented from potting the lion or the brown bear in the Zoo scene—a capital realisation of the famous gardens by Mr. R. McCleery. Mr. McArdle pays a compliment to everybody's friend, Willie Clarkson, in his make-up as a perruquier, and sings a capital song in "Ou, la, la!" one of Witmark's brightest numbers. There is some capital business in the burlesque of Alias Jimmy Valentine; and another real bit of fun is the burlesque of the Village Players headed by Mr. Fred Leslie, who has inherited a great deal of his famous father's histrionic ability. He is ably assisted by Mr. Ralph Roberts, Misses Maud Jay and Frances Kapstowne. The Chantecler skit is, of course, retained in the final scene, which is further brightened by the waltz, an engaging melody, by Mr. Napoleon Lambelet, to which Miss Valli Valli in the sweetest of dresses, dances most bewitchingly with Mr. Fred Leslie. The political reference—without which no revue would be considered complete—to Mr. Winston Churchill, "Winny," and Mr. Lloyd George, "Davy," goes rather flat. Both want a "ship," not a Dreadnought but the premiership. Mr. Ralph Roberts gives a capital impersonation of Teddy Payne in Our Miss Gibbs, but there is no special significance in his Kermit Roosevelt. Mr. Charles Childerstone, an old Savoyard, finds scope for his abilities as an actor and vocalist in the parts of a keeper and a conductor. Feldman's songs, "Beside the seaside" and "I'd rather be beside the fireside," make distinct hits. Miss Valli Valli, if not liberally endowed as a vocalist, has a keen sense of satire, and is responsible for very graceful dancing and bright work in parodies of The Speckled Band (with a very real-looking snake), The Girl in the Train, The Bad Girl of the Family, and Mme. Sarah Bernhardt. The waltz melody lays rather too high for her voice. There is no lack of briskness or beauty in the latest phase of Mr. George Grossmith's go-as-you-please burlesque, which on Monday evening afforded an immense amount of amusement to a very large audience, who were evidently exhilarated by the constant brightness of the mise-en-scène, the tasteful dresses, and the excellent work of the ballet and chorus.

The Euterpeans are at the Montpelier Pavilion, Cheltenham, this week. Messrs. Alf. Wood, Herbert Spalding, Percy Watson, and Philip Ward, with the Misses Margery Barras and Edith Payne, contribute to a really excellent entertainment.

Francis Willmott, of St. Olave's-road, Fulham, was summoned, before Mr. Francis, at South-West London Police Court, for assaulting an attendant at Putney Hippodrome, named Frederick Mills, living at Danmere-street, Putney. It was stated that while a performance was in progress the defendant rose and shouted at one of the artists. When the complainant went to him he said he would have his money back. The witness told him he must see the manager about it, whereupon the defendant put out his leg and threw the witness to the ground. He afterwards nearly strangled the complainant, and so serious was the situation that two or three of the audience came to the witness's assistance—a very unusual thing. The defendant denied the assault, which, however, was corroborated by another attendant, and Willmott was fined forty shillings and costs.

THE SHOWMAN WORLD

Fairs Ahead.

THE fairground fixtures for next week are Burnley, on the Lancashire and Yorkshire; Mansfield, on the Great Central and Midland; Chumleigh, on the London and South-Western; Linton, on the Great Eastern; Holmesfield, on the Midland; Horsham, on the London and Brighton and South Coast; Sutton-in-Ashfield, on the Midland; Tunstall, on the North Staffordshire; Atherstone, on the London and North-Western; Glasgow, on the London and North-Western and Caledonian Joint, the Midland and North British, the North-Eastern and Scotch Railway connections; Motherwell, on the Caledonian; and Johnstone, on the Glasgow and South-Western Railways.

The Guild Meetings at Greenock.

THE meetings announced for Sunday, July 3, were postponed to Sunday, July 10. The altered date was owing to the fact that only a part of the fair was opened on Saturday, the 2nd inst., the greater number of shows, machines, &c., could not draw on the No. 2 fairground until after the Sunday. The fair holiday began July 6, and on that day both the No. 1 fairground and the No. 2 ground were set out in grand array by the lessee, Mr. John Wilmot and his energetic sons, who assist him in his business. It is confidently anticipated that next Sunday's meeting, owing to the great number of showpeople at Greenock this fair, will be a record one. The meetings will be at 3.30 and at 6.30, in the Temperance Tent on the No. 2 fairground. The afternoon gathering will be the Guild business meeting, when the Organising Chaplain will speak, and the leading showmen at Greenock will take part in the proceedings.

Greenock Trade Holiday Fairs.

NEARLY all the great towns in Scotland have their Trade Holidays in July. Greenock and Port Glasgow, the great shipbuilding centres on the Clyde, begin their holidays on the first Wednesday in the month, and Glasgow itself keeps holiday the week after. There are two well set out fairgrounds at Greenock, close enough together to be regarded as one huge fair. The veteran Scotch showman Mr. John Wilmot controls both grounds. He is able to open one of the grounds a few days before the holidays commence; the other ground is not available until the actual fair days. On the No. 1 ground Mr. Wilmot exhibits his fine set of steeplechasers—a favourite roundabout on the Wilmot circuit of fairs—and the racing cockerels, another attractive set. The other novelties on this ground are Howard and Sons' ships in the air and J. Wilmot, jun.'s gem horses and park swings. The principal shows are McIndoe's Scottish Palace of Light and varieties (proprietor and manager, Mr. A. Henderson), A. Sedgwick's lion show, and J. R. Style's midget marvel show. Caddick's American photo saloon car is a special feature, and Boswell's palmistry pavilion forms a well-appointed and clever side show.

Shooters, Houp-las, and Games.

THE shooting ranges, jungles, and rifle galleries are provided by those experts of the breechloader Messrs. Dawson, Wright, Sheeran, and Palmer; Houp-las of all kinds and shapes by Messrs. J. Caddick, jun., Slater, H. Strand, H. Irvin, jun., Mrs. Hunter, Messrs. J. McIndoe, A. Carrick, J. Wilmot, jun., J. Blockley, C. Johnson, H. J. Johnson, and E. Stevenson. The fine array of variety stalls and throwing games are provided by Messrs. F. Towers, H. Newey, Strand, J. Wright, Slater, McIndoe, H. Dawson, Mrs. Smith, and several others, whose names are already chronicled as exhibitors of the popular game of houp-la.

The Number Two Fairground.

Minor Amusements—Variety Stalls, &c.

QUITE two sides of the square of this second fairground are occupied by throwing games, houp-las and variety stalls providing all the "fun of the fair," the merrimen and funmakers being Messrs. W. Smith, D. Kennedy, Wm. McIndoe, W. Kelly, J. Kelsall, J. May, C. Thomas, E. Stevenson, E. Moore, Mrs. Knight, Mrs. T. Wright, and many others.

Port Glasgow Fair Holidays.

CLOSELY linked with Greenock Town is the shipbuilding district of Port Glasgow. Only a few miles separate the two towns, and for trade and industrial purposes the two may be regarded as one. In olden times the fair at Port Glasgow was held the three days before Greenock. Now the trade holidays govern the whole district, and one result is that both fairs are held together. It is one of the few remaining street fairs in Scotland, and it has the advantage of brightening by its very presence the centre of the town and the market square by the Town Hall and quayside. The lessee of the fair is Mr. James Wilmot, son of Mr. John Wilmot, so that the three fair-grounds of Greenock and Port Glasgow are under expert management.

Shows, Roundabouts, and Other Amusements.

MR. JAS. WILMOT exhibits his splendid set of electric motor-cars. The other machine novelties are Broughton's juvenile motor-cars and swings, Talbot's juvenile horses, Slater's racing bike track, and Palmer's park swings. The shows are A. Biddell's cinematograph theatre and T. Paulo's circus and living-picture show, and J. Buckley's miniature animal jungle and Teddy Bears. The houp-las (round and square) are the concerns of Messrs. Odgen, West, Entwistle, Horne, and Kelsall; and throwing games and variety stalls in well-ordered array by Messrs. Dorrington, Talbot, Cunningham, Taylor, Horner, Simonoff, Weldon, and other caterers. Toy and confectionary stalls were by local caterers. The opening days of the holiday were fine, and as a consequence great crowds of eager patrons were at both the local fairs, and good business was done.

AT the Chipping Norton fair, or club, on Tuesday there were Forest's roundabouts, swings, and shooting range, Benfield's swings and hoop-la, Hatfield's shooting gallery, hoop-la, &c., Fletcher's Emma sheet and hoop-la, together with numerous stalls and coccoanut shies,

AT Wakefield Fair were Mr. G. Aspland, motors; Mr. J. W. Waddington, motors; Messrs. Farrar and Tyler, scenic railway; Mr. Stephen Waddington, yachts; Mr. G. A. Holden, cinematograph; Mr. Enoch Farrar, cinematograph; Messrs. Farrer and Tyler, cinematograph; Mr. E. Farrar, boxing show; Mr. G. Cornwell, Winchester and bottle shooters; Mr. H. Gledstone, bazaars; Mr. S. Doubtfire and Mr. J. Gavon, juvenile horses and gems; and Messrs. S. Doubtfire, W. Steward, and G. Cornwell, Emmas, &c.

The Movable Dwellings Bill, 1910.

THE next meeting of the Select Committee on this measure will take place on Tuesday, July 12, at 2 p.m.

GUILD SUBSCRIPTION, 1910.—John G. Dixon, 5s.

THE MOVABLE DWELLINGS BILL (1910).

THIRD ARTICLE.

SUMMARY POWERS TO PROHIBIT FAIRS.

There is an extremely novel and dangerous feature in the Movable Dwellings Bill as introduced by Lord Clifford of Chudleigh. We refer to Clause 5 of the Bill, which reads as follows:—

"When it appears to any registration authority that the presence of Movable Dwellings on any specified place or places within their area would be dangerous to public health, or constitute a nuisance to the neighbourhood, the registration authority may by by-laws prohibit such movable dwellings being on such specified place or places; and any person acting in contravention of any by-law made under this section shall be guilty of an offence under this Act."

Ill-judged and drastic as the provisions of previous attempts at legislation were, none of them asked for such extraordinary powers as those sought in Clause 5 of the present Movable Dwellings Bill. Here we have invidious class legislation at its worst. It is Local Government gone mad. If by any mischance such proposals become law, the taint of criminality would be attached to 70,000 law-abiding subjects of the King. The stigma of being thought fit subjects for special and oppressive laws would immediately be cast upon a large and industrious class of persons carrying on a skilled craft and necessary work in the nation. The determination to oppose Clause 5 of the new Bill became the centre of the fight of the organised showmen against the Bill. The statement of the Showmen's Guild, "That if the Movable Dwellings Bill only contained one clause and that was Clause 5, it would be the duty of showmen to oppose it at every stage of its career in Parliament" was the only pronouncement that could have been made in the circumstances.

In the course of his evidence in chief for the showmen, the Rev. T. Horne, Guild Chaplain, told the Select Committee of the House of Lords that Clause 5 was from the showman's point of view the fatal flaw in the Bill. It would give to local authorities extraordinary powers without any check. The showmen dreaded that these powers might be used as the instruments of oppression and harassment against them and their avocation in life. Further, that these powers might be used to abolish fairs without any appeal whatever to the people, as provided under the existing Statutes. He referred to the Abolition of Fairs Acts. The showmen's case against such abuse of powers he stated to be as follows: Under the Abolition of Fairs Acts, the constitutional way to abolish a fair was for the local authority to apply to the Home Secretary under the Statutes. The Home Secretary then caused an official inquiry to be made. At this inquiry the people of the town, the showmen, and local traders had a full opportunity of expressing their opinions on the matter.

Wherever public opinion supported the application of the local authority, the Home Secretary, under the Statutes, proceeded to abolish the fair. Where public opinion did not support the application of the authority, the Home Secretary invariably refused to exercise his powers.

The showmen objected to fairs being abolished by a sort of side wind, backstair operation, or local factions trying to override the wishes of the people.

Clause 5 and Possible Amendments.

Answering Lord Clifford of Chudleigh the Chaplain said that showmen invariably camped on recognised fairgrounds, and that the other classes of movable dwellings did not, as a rule, use the same ground.

Lord Clifford suggested that it might be possible to make an exception in Clause 5 to cover fairgrounds. Mr. Horne pointed out the extreme difficulty of so doing. The council of the Guild had tried to draft such an amendment. As regards the Charter and Corporation Fairs, and the regular fairs of the show season, it would be possible to frame one. The question was complicated by the fact that a certain section of their members, and that, too, the poorer section, were compelled in the winter months to lease private land, generally in the suburbs of the large towns, to open on Saturdays and Mondays for a little possible business. This was necessary in order to provide for the working staff of the shows during the slack season of the year. The Committee would see that an exemption clause, merely covering recognised fairgrounds and at fair times, would not cover the necessities of the winter months.

Clause 5 would give the local authorities powers to harass showpeople and to drive them from place to place in the most cruel time of the year. Nothing short of full exemption for the settlement of show vans at all times and all places would meet their objections to Clause 5.

At an earlier stage in the proceedings of the Committee, when Mr. John Pedder, an official of the Home Office, was under examination, the showmen's objections to Clause 5 were strongly supported by the evidence tendered by the Home Department against it. Effective and convincing as the arguments of the Guild against the clause were, much more effective and far-reaching in their scope were the objections to the clause submitted by the expert from the Home Office. In addition to the argument that the clause would give arbitrary powers to local authorities to prohibit fairs, Mr. Pedder said that the Home Office objected to additional powers being granted by by-laws that would not come before the department for possible revision before confirmation. Entirely apart from the question as to the justice of the proposals, the bill did not propose to submit by-laws made under the Act to the Home Office for confirmation. This alone marked the Bill as extraordinary and out of correspondence with the whole trend of Local Government legislation. The right of persons threatened by proposed by-laws to petition against them was a well recognised and necessary safeguard. The proposed powers of Clause 5 utterly ignored that right, as well as the control of the Central Authority acting for the Crown in matters lawful. Under the various corporation and municipal Government Acts all by-laws were submitted to either the Home Office or to the Local Government Board for confirmation—or rejection. Clause 5 seemed to be an endeavour to get beyond this necessary safeguard, and to give absolute powers without revision or sanction to the local authorities.

The Limitation of Class Legislation.

There were, he pointed out, already on the Statute Book a large number of special powers, and in his opinion the object sought by Clause 5 (so far as it was just to obtain such objects) was already dealt with by Section 9 of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885. Although these matters referred chiefly to health and sanitation, the operation of these powers had come before the Home Office, and it was part of his evidence to refer to it.

For many years complaints had come to the Home Office, mostly from the home counties, that new powers were wanted. When inquiry had been made and the Home Secretary had written back saying, "Please direct your attention to these powers" (the powers under the Housing of the Working Classes Act and the Public Health Act with regard to nuisances, gipsy encampments, van and tent dwellers), the answers had been extremely vague, and sometimes none at all; and there the matter had dropped. Further, he said that under the common law it is possible for the local authority to obtain an injunction to restrain the letting of land for the purposes of gipsy encampments. This had been done, and there was a leading case on the subject.

Proceeding, he said that with regard to nuisances other than sanitary, such as "acts of theft," damage, and intimidation," these offences are punishable under the ordinary law, whether they are committed by vandwellers or not. The general principle of the Home Department in reporting upon Bills is that if an offence can be punished (by whomsoever committed) that is an objection in the first instance to special provisions penalising a special class of persons for doing the same thing. In many cases that had come before the Home Office with regard to the difficulties dealing with gipsies they have not been able to satisfy themselves that the law had failed from its essential weakness. The thing failed because it had not been pursued properly. With regard to "good rule and government," he had one or two more Acts to mention. These were the old Vagrancy Act of 1824 and the Highways Act of 1835, which dealt directly with gipsies and vandwellers. The Vagrancy Act dealt with persons wandering about without visible means of subsistence, and committing offences which would bring them within the meaning of the words "rogues and vagabonds." The Highways Act imposed penalties for pitching upon the highway or any part of the highway, and this Act had been found effective for its purpose. He drew the attention of the Committee to the Commons Acts of 1876 and 1899, and also to the Open Spaces Act of 1906. Under these Statutes local authorities could take steps to acquire control and could obtain powers to make by-laws for the regulation of commons and open spaces.

Most of the by-laws confirmed by the Home Secretary had been by-laws directed to the prevention of encampments in these places, but, in his opinion, that was a different thing from a wide general prohibition all over the country.

Clause 5 Creates a New Crime.

Coming to the actual effect of the clause, Mr. Pedder observed that it was a surprise to his department to find it in the Bill; it seemed to go against the tendency of the previous attempted legislation for this reason: the earlier Bills, of which there had been a number from 1887 onwards, were directed mainly to the health, the betterment of van life, and to the education of vandwellers' children.

It was significant that not until 1908 (more than twenty years after the appearance of the first of these Bills) did this clause make its appearance. It seemed to them that Clause 5 is directly opposed to the intention of previous measures dealing with vandwellers. It practically made them outlaws and created a new crime.

If the local authority decides that "such a place is not to be entered by a vandweller, then and there a vandweller is prohibited, although the vandweller might be able to show that he was quite ready to conform to all the regulations and laws, quite ready to prevent himself being a nuisance, yet, if the edict once went forth that there was a place where they would be a nuisance, he could not go there.

That, in particular, seemed to them to be hard on travelling showmen, because although they might be perfectly proper as popular amusement caterers and able to keep themselves in order, if the local authority marked a certain place as being liable to become a nuisance, the showmen could not go there save under a penalty.

There is no provision to allow him to go in spite of the original prohibition.

In his opinion, the matter could not be dealt with by giving the local authorities powers to "permit or licence" individuals or particular trades. That would go against the expressed will of Parliament in recent years and the views of the Home Office as represented to Parliament, for it would constitute preferential treatment of individuals within a given class.

Some Useful Reflections.

It is encouraging to notice that the better mind of the great departments of State with regard to show life exactly coincides with the time that showpeople began to defend themselves from invidious attacks. When the attention of the country was drawn to the real life and character of the travelling showman, then it was that the Home Office and the Local Government Board began to scrutinise more carefully by-laws sent up to them for confirmation in order to strike out proposals that would act unfairly against show life.

Petitions sent in by the Showmen's Guild against by-law proposals gave the departments of State critical and expert data for their information and guidance. The agitation and propaganda work of the Guild by public meetings and informing articles and correspondence in the press materially helped in forming a healthy and wise public opinion favourable to the hitherto misunderstood show people. The later and extremely important work of the Guild in opposing Private Bill legislation attacking show life, the evidence given in Private Bill Committees of Parliament, brought the showman's case more particularly and personally before the permanent officials of the departments of State, with the result so eminently satisfactory at the present time that the official view invariably corroborates the defence set out by the Guild. This is the greatest of all the results, and the rewards for hard work won by the organised showmen. Twenty-one years of strenuous toil has brought the leaders of showland the abounding satisfaction of knowing that both at the Home Office and at the Local Government Board it is well known and accepted that the showman's objections to penalising and restrictive legislation, whether by Act of Parliament or by special by-laws, are valid and reasonable objections. It is recognised that the travelling showman has a useful place to fill in the economy of the State—that our fairs, feasts, and wakes are providing wholesome and necessary recreation and amusement for the great mass of the people. The great Government departments agree with the position taken up by the Showmen's Guild that instead of increasing the local powers to harass and to control shows and showmen to restrict or to prohibit fairs and the people's holiday, the already existing powers need the most careful restraint, if justice is to be secured to the travelling showman and the toil-worn people who still enjoy the open air fun and jolly comradeship of our fairs.

"The Newspaper of the Future."

FROM an interesting article in T.P.'s Weekly last week, entitled "Seeing the Pictures," we quote the following:—"One may learn from books and newspapers that things are different in other lands, and that disasters and great historic events are taking place. Reading of these things does not give complete satisfaction or knowledge, and one turns instinctively to the pictorial presentation. This desire for the fuller knowledge that comes from pictorial presentation has led to the rapid growth of the illustrated Press. In a sense it is correct to say that the old way was better, that the pictograph gave the more lasting impression than the word, and that in seeking something new mankind instinctively turns to the old. The book or press illustration is inert—dead. Men sought for something better, something that would increase knowledge, and found the old pictograph endowed with life and accuracy in the cinematograph. The living picture will be the newspaper of the future, and the greatest educational force of the twentieth century."

AT the meeting of the London County Council on Tuesday, Mr. Barrett presented a petition from St. Pancras in favour of granting six-day licences to cinematograph shows.

REOPENING OF THE GLASGOW ZOO

It is just fifteen months since Mr. E. H. Bostock dispersed the fine collection of "birds, beasts, and reptiles" which he had collected and shown in the above building for eight or nine years previously, and since then the premises have been occupied as a roller-skating rink, and latterly were leased to Mr. Frank C. Bostock for his American Zoo and Jungle.

The patronage bestowed on the latter entertainment showed that the popular attraction of a menagerie was as strong as ever, and even the Glasgow Corporation, which declined to buy Mr. E. H. Bostock's collection of animals at the gift prices he offered them to form the nucleus of a public Zoo, have since then discussed the feasibility of starting such in one or other of the city parks. Under the circumstances, Mr. Bostock was fully justified in reverting to the type of entertainment which made the success of the Scottish Zoo in its earlier days. The walls are lined with cages containing a wonderful variety of the animal kingdom, and the cages are so arranged that there is a passage behind leading to a larger central cage in which performances take place with the trained animals. In addition, there has been erected in the centre of the large Zoo, a well-arranged circus, with excellent seating accommodation comprising gallery (free) and pit, balcony, and stalls at moderate prices of admission. Mr. Bostock has thoroughly ransacked the British and Continental repositories in his search for a representative collection, and the result is that the present Zoo will rank with anything of the kind ever seen in Glasgow. Only three of the animals were in the old collection, and these are a group of young performing lions which, owing to a dispute between two buyers at the sale, remained in Mr. Bostock's possession.

The opening ceremony on Monday was under the patronage of the magistrates and Town Council of Glasgow, and on their behalf Bailie Campbell made a speech of welcome in declaring the building open. This was followed by some racy remarks from "the man you know," Mr. W. F. Frame, and then Mr. Bostock expressed his thanks for their good wishes. Most of the old Zoo staff are to be found in their familiar places, and the performing animals are again put through their paces by Captain Taylor.

In the circus building the entertainment is provided by the Brothers Volpi's Italian Circus, and the fine collection of ponies, dogs, monkeys, goats, &c., combine to make an excellent attraction, in which the numerous clowns ably keep the humorous element to the fore. Mr. Edwin Gilley manages the circus portion, and the Zoo itself is under the personal control of Mr. E. H. Bostock, ably assisted by his son, Mr. E. H. A. Bostock, and by Mr. J. Arbuckle. Large crowds patronised the opening performances both afternoon and evening, and the proceeds were entirely given to the three Glasgow infirmaries, Mr. Bostock generously augmenting the sum taken at the doors.

Alf. Ball's Bioscope Destroyed.

MR. ALFRED BALL, brother to Alderman J. H. Ball, J.P., of Hanley, has sustained a severe loss. Mr. Ball travels with a huge picture palace show, which was built in Paris, at a cost of £5,000, and only came out last season. It is supposed to be one of the first "Palaces on wheels" in England, the front of the organ being 55ft., and the depth of palace 80ft. The show was at Tilbury Docks, Essex, on Saturday, and at about 4 o'clock on Sunday morning Mr. Ball was awakened to find the whole concern was in flames. The fire brigade were soon on the spot, and did their utmost to save something, but were unable to cope with the fire, and everything was burnt to the ground.

MR. A. BALL and his son were slightly burnt, and a prize dog and monkey perished in the flames. The only thing saved was the carriage in which Mr. Ball lives, which stood away from the palace. This house was badly scorched. It is believed that the fire was caused by the show being struck by lightning during the thunderstorm which raged during the night.

MR. BALL writes:—"As you know, my show and front have been completely destroyed by fire on Monday at 4 o'clock a.m., so I am sending you particulars. On Sunday night, as usual, I took a last look round to see that everything was all right at about 1.30, and retired to bed confident that all was in perfect order and safe. At about 3.30 my wife woke me up and told me that the wind was blowing hard and something had fallen on my organ front. I jumped out of bed, and on looking out of my waggon window I discovered that the side of the front was a mass of flames.

"I RUSHED out in my night attire and called my son and men up, but in less than fifteen minutes from the time I first discovered the fire the whole of the tilts, shutter, and organ front were completely burnt to a cinder. The only thing that it was possible to do was to try and shift my living waggons, one of which, standing 12ft. away from the front, had already caught, and was only saved by the arrival of the Tilbury Fire Brigade, whose smart work quickly put the flames out. The policeman on duty tells me that he passed and had a look round at 3 o'clock, and all was quiet and safe; at 4.15 all that remained of the show was a mass of cinders. Unfortunately for me the show is not insured, and I have now to make a fresh start with what I can fix up, which will be a hard task with the elaborate shows that are travelling the country and fairs. The only conclusion I can come to is that the show was struck by lightning, as nothing has been discovered to point to any other cause. With these particulars you can put a report in your paper."

MR. PAT COLLINS, ever generous, upon hearing that Mr. Ball's loss will amount to something like £3,000, informed him that he had started a subscription list for his benefit. We shall be pleased to receive and announce any subscriptions sent to alleviate the great loss Mr. Alf. Ball has sustained. Unfortunately he was not insured.

MRS. ELIZABETH CRECRAFT, the oldest living show proprietor in the world, has just celebrated her ninety-second year. She has never known what it is to live in a house. In an interview with a representative of the Western Mail she said:—"I have lived in the reigns of six Sovereigns, and, what is more, I have seen them all—George III., George IV., William IV., Queen Victoria, Edward VII., and George V. I can't tell you what I haven't exhibited in my time. In turn I have shown menageries, waxworks, living skeletons, and fat women; a man 21lb. in weight and another 42st.; a dwarf 27in. in height and a giant 7ft. 4in.; in fact, I have exhibited practically every kind of living novelty known in my days. Many of the best-known showmen of to-day learnt their business with me."

THE Messrs. Crecraft are paying a visit to Carmarthen this week, and opened on Monday evening with their fine electric bioscope and variety entertainment, having taken up their position on the Corporation Fair Ground. Included in the programme is the appearances of Dizart, the wonderful jail breaker and handcuff expert, whose performances create no end of wonder and surprise. The bioscope exhibition consists of new and up-to-date pictures, both of a sentimental and comic nature, and the comic songs, contributed by members of the company, go a long way to assist in the highly entertaining proceedings. Good attendances are the order nightly.

FILM GOSSIP.

The Johnson-Jeffries Pictures.

Mr. Howell Davies, M.P., has given notice to ask the Home Secretary if he has power to prohibit photographs of the recent prize fight in America being exhibited at cinematograph shows in this country, and, if so, will he, in the interest of public decency, exercise his power of prohibition. The Glasgow Corporation discussed their power on Thursday to prevent the public exhibition of moving pictures of the Johnson-Jeffries fight. It was explained by the town clerk that if the show was given in a duly licensed place the civic authorities could not interfere. No offence or breach of the law seemed to be involved.

Pathé's New List.

Next week Pathé's will release The Grasshopper and the Ant, Salome, A Mother's Evil Dream, Fashoda, Buffalo Hunting in Indo-China, Love and Goodfellowship Pills, Carlo's Portrait, Soap in His Eye, Does She Love Me? The Broken Vow, Betty's Removal, The End of a Dynasty, and Hunting Chamois in the Alps.

The Latest in Singing Pictures.

By arrangement with the Animatophone Syndicate, Ltd., the management of the Electric Theatre, Wolverhampton, this week have inaugurated quite the latest idea in singing pictures. By an ingenious piece of mechanism, aided by electricity, the operator in the biograph box at one end of the theatre is able to control in the orchestra the instrument responsible for the vocal and musical effects, with the result that the latter absolutely synchronise with the action of the pictures. This is one of the first instruments of its kind to be installed, and the proprietors intend to adopt this system at all their theatres, and periodically give representations of grand opera.

Wide World Pictures at Aldershot.

Always up to date, the management are showing all the topical pictures of recent events, and a splendid programme is presented. Full houses are the order at the two performances nightly.

Celestial Cinematographs.

The French Consul at Tientsin reports that the cinematograph has caught the Chinese taste to such an extent that German and Japanese firms are making enormous sums in China with moving picture shows. The Chinese, he says, like war scenes best, but not the Western idea of humour.

Johnson-Jeffries Pictures Banned.

The police have notified the proprietors of more than a hundred theatres in the district of Columbia that the Commissioners have forbidden any exhibition of moving pictures showing the Jeffries-Johnson fight. This strong opposition to the pictures was aroused by the fear that the exhibitions would inflame both negroes and whites. The United Society of Christian Endeavour of Boston, with branches in every city and town in the country, has begun a strenuous campaign for the suppression of the pictures, and has telegraphed to Mr. Roosevelt with regard to it.

Full houses continue to be the rule at the Houghton-le-Spring Picture Palace. An enjoyable programme is being submitted this week, leading pictures being The Toreador, The Suit Case Mystery, The Girl and the Fugitive, and The Ostrich and the Lady.

New "Kinemacolour" Pictures at the Palace.

New "Kinemacolour" pictures to be included in the Palace Theatre programme next Monday comprise some fine views of an Atlantic liner under full steam. A delightfully rural and particularly seasonable subject illustrating the growing and gathering of Kentish strawberries at St. Mary Cray will also be shown.

Gotch v. Zbyszko.

The great match between Gotch and Zbyszko for 25,000 dollars, which was wrestled to a finish at the Coliseum, Chicago, on June 1 last, before a crowd of 13,000 people, can be witnessed in its entirety in London during next week, as it will be shown hourly from 2 o'clock at the Piccadilly Cinematograph Theatre, Great Windmill-street. The film is of excellent quality. Every movement of the contestants is portrayed from the moment they enter the ring till Gotch rises victor. Before the actual contest is shown, views are given of both Gotch and Zbyszko training.

Fight Films Rushed to London.

The films of the Johnson-Jeffries fight are now being rushed across the American continent, and will probably be seen in London next Monday week, though it is possible that some places of amusement may be able to show them on the Saturday night previous. For films of the Burns-Johnson fight in Australia well over £5,000 were paid for use in this country, but, apart from this, pictures of boxing in far-off places have not created much of a stir here. For the privilege of photographing exclusively the battle of Monday night the Vitagraph Company, of New York, paid £40,000 to the interested parties, and, in addition to this James Jeffries and Jack Johnson will draw royalties.

Picture Palace for Annfield Plain (Durham).

Mr. Armour and Co., Gateshead, are preparing plans for a fine hall, to seat about 1,500 people, at Annfield Plain, West Durham, with tip-up chairs, and all the latest electric improvements, and which will rank as one of the finest buildings in the provinces. It is to be worked on day and night, and will open in nine weeks' time. Built on Bloom's Market Ground, to the order of R. J. W. Bloom, of Sunderland, it will be named the New King's Royal Picture Palace.

The paragraph in the report of the L.C.C. Theatres and Music Halls Committee relating to the Sunday opening of cinematograph shows was again presented to the Council just about midnight on Tuesday. Once more it was opposed, and had to be further adjourned.

Cinematograph Pictures in the Open.

Walter Tyler, Ltd., of 48 to 50, Waterloo-road, the well-known manufacturers of every description of photographic apparatus and films, gave, last Tuesday afternoon, an interesting demonstration to the Press of projecting lantern slides and cinematograph pictures in the open daylight, an innovation which is certain in the near future to obtain a firm hold upon the up-to-date showman, who depends much upon the sea-shore and the open air for exhibits, and which have hitherto been only permissible to evening shows, and mostly those within the doors of the popular theatres now so largely devoted to that object. Although some of the exhibits were, in the opinion of our representative, not quite removed from the embryonic stage, they were unquestionably successful when the meagre means available for obtaining the requisite light for the productions came to be taken into consideration. Some of the familiar pictures deserved special mention for their first introduction to a daylight audience whose numbers were too small to be enthusiastically demonstrative, but were, nevertheless, impressed with the fact that Walter Tyler's indefatigable operators were up to their work, and intended that no flaw should in the future mar their endeavours to still further improve upon the show they gave on Tuesday afternoon.

RINKING GOSSIP.

Rinking Revels at Wandsworth.

Mr. Simmons Barker, the enterprising manager of the Central Hall Skating Rink at Wandsworth, introduced two original events into a highly successful gymkhana recently held at his establishment. One was a performing donkey on skates, which kept a large audience in roars of laughter throughout the evening. The animal, which was of the pantomime fraternity, consisted of two well-known trick skaters enveloped in a skin, who alternately "two-stepped," waltzed, and capered round the rink in a manner which was irresistibly comical.

Obstacle Race on Skates.

The other event of interest was the obstacle race on skates. The skating surface was equipped with all the obstacles associated with a similar competition on the "flat"—swinging tubs, tarpaulins, trapezes, and hurdles being much in evidence. The difficulties of surmounting such obstacles whilst fettered with skates provided many thrills for both competitors and onlookers alike. The race was won by Mr. Hunt, with Mr. Sutton a good second. These two competitors caused much amusement during the course of the competition by both making for a swinging tub at the same moment, and eventually becoming wedged, to the vast amusement of the onlookers. Other interesting events were the hockey ball race, won by Miss Bright; a half-mile backward handicap; and an individual two-step, won by Miss Gillis, with Miss Wilkinson, of graceful skating fame, a good second.

Skating Ball at Blackpool.

A scene of animated splendour was presented at the Colosseum Rink, Blackpool, recently, when a grand skating ball was held. The event was promoted by the Colosseum Social Skating Club, who are to be congratulated on the success which attended the most enjoyable function. There was an attendance of about 200 persons, whilst over 100 skaters thoroughly enjoyed the admirable programme, and at the same time pleased the spectators immensely. The rinkers disported themselves merrily in light summer attire, and the gay scene was considerably enhanced by the brilliant coloured illumination of hundreds of suspended fairy lamps. During the evening an interesting and clever exhibition of fancy skating was given by Miss Jessie Darling, whose prominence in the skatorial world has earned for her an enviable reputation. Another delightful feature was the appearance of "Dainty Little Doris," aged ten years, and reputed as the youngest exhibition skater in Great Britain.

Rinking at Brighton.

The boisterous winds which the Clerk of the Weather has been sending us make everyone seek for an enjoyable shelter, and where is there in Brighton a better retreat than the Skating Rink in Church-street? It being midsummer, one might get the idea that the weather would be too hot for skating, but those who visit the rink can vouch for its coolness, the management claiming it to be "the coolest rink in England." A perfect floor, and a good pair of skates, and delightful surroundings are all the devotees of the fascinating pastime require, and all these are to be found at this popular rink. There is only one session daily—that being in the evening—except on Saturdays, when three sessions are held. Mr. F. Reed (the general manager) has recently opened the West-street Skating Rink as the "Pop" Winter Garden.

Blackpool's Pleasure Beach Rink.

The largest rink in Blackpool is in the centre of the open air fun city at South Shore, on the glorious sands, where thousands are attracted daily by the many attractions on the Pleasure Beach. This rink, which was very popular with the visitors last year, is so arranged that the sides may be opened and fresh breezes from the Irish Sea may be breathed while partaking of the delightful pastime of roller skating. "SINNERS."

Dramatic Playlet, in One Scene, Produced at the Battersea Palace, on Monday, July 4.

Blanche Despard .....MISS FLORENCE BARNES
Victor Dupree .....MR. ARNOLD MUSSET
Leon Despard .....MR. LEONARD BOOKER
Paul Colette .....MR. JOHN F. TRAYNOR

Contrary to usual custom here, only one sketch appears upon the bill this week—Sinners. It is described as a dramatic playlet in one scene, and is performed by H. G. Brandon's capable company. In the private parlour of a Paris restaurant we are introduced to a number of members of some secret society or brotherhood. One of them, Leon Despard, is accused by another of having sold certain secrets, his accuser, Paul Colette, presently proving, however, to be himself, so to speak, the villain of the piece and the enemy of Despard. When Despard, having admitted his guilt to the meeting and expressed repentance for his act of betrayal, is handed a pistol and is requested to put an end to himself and the matter generally in an adjacent chamber, the arrival of his wife when he is on the point of doing so prevents so undesirable a catastrophe. Denouncing Paul Colette as her early betrayer, she proclaims her husband Despard the saviour of herself and her child, pleading that Despard's act of betrayal of the society was committed in order to procure funds to save her and the child.

Upon this somewhat slender basis the members of the society argue at some length, with the ultimate result that the two men Despard and Colette are brought together to settle matters between them, the society awaiting the issue. A shot is heard off, but Colette returns to say that no one has been shot to date. The five gentlemen then renew their argument, the chief amongst the company finally putting the problem that the man who is without sin must put an end to Despard, and no one in the meeting finding himself up to this standard, it is finally decided that the only course open is to reunite husband and wife. The motives of the various characters appear to be somewhat lacking in common sense as far as one can gather in so brief an episode. Without giving great scope for acting, the parts were adequately represented by Miss Florence Barnes as Blanche Despard, Arnold Musset as Victor Dupree (an artist), Leonard Booker as Leon Despard, and John F. Traynor as Paul Colette.

Dick Tubb, a most amusing comedian, is a favourite at Battersea. He is gifted with a particularly indiarubber-like and adjustable countenance, and is very funny in gag, dance, and song. The Coopers give a vaudeville entertainment which goes well. The lady member of the trio both sings charmingly and is an exceedingly graceful and pleasing dancer. The Two Lees give their much appreciated musical speciality. Alice Lawrence sings prettily; Laurie and Elsie, two young girls, render their duets in capital style, their voices harmonising very delightfully; the Alskarno Trio cause roars of laughter with the comic episodes of their entertainment; Norah Noble, very simply and prettily costumed, receives great applause for her songs; and George Campbell, a clever patter comedian, and an excellent series of pictures complete the bill.

THE Hambledon (Surrey) Rural District Council has decided to apply to the Home Secretary for the abolition of the Haslemere Charter Fair, which dates from the reign of Queen Elizabeth. "Great difficulty is experienced," the Council state, "if the stallholders are obstreperous, and the police are unable to deal with them efficiently owing to the fact that as long as the Charter is in force the men are able to set up their stalls in the streets of the town. This they have frequently threatened to do when pressure has been brought to bear on them."

WHILST the well-known lion tamer, Albert Williams, was putting two lions through their performance on Friday, July 1, at Hayle, Cornwall, one of the animals, from whom for a moment he withdrew his attention, savagely attacked him in the back. He was attended by Dr. Hamilton, Trepolterrace, Hayle, Cornwall, who found that he was badly lacerated. The lion was finally driven off with irons.
